Does county have 'teeth' to protect Big Sur?

By DAVID LELAND

JUST THREE years after the sound thrashing of Sen. Pete Wilson's bid for federalization of the Big Sur coast, some residents are questioning the county's ability to carry out its part of the bargain.

In theory, the county wielding sufficient muscle to enforce violations concerning the Big Sur Local Coastal Plan sounds simple enough. But realistically, county zoning officials complain that they are handcuffed by a limited staff and also face the challenge of policing a large geographical area.

Indeed, Monterey County has a staff of four to investigate zoning complaints, with one person assigned to Carmel Valley and Big Sur. In the 5th District alone — which encompasses Big Sur — that means riding herd over 462,900 acres of rugged terrain.

The effect, according to critics, is a zoning department that is slow to act and lacks the punch needed to stop major violations.

That idea is shared by the department itself.

"It's such a big territory, it's extremely difficult for one person to cover," said Dale Ellis, zoning administrator.

As a result, the county basically operates on a reactive basis. In other words, workers investigate the problem only after someone makes a complaint.

"By the time we get a complaint the work is done," Ellis said.

GIVEN THE task of upholding the dictates of the Big Sur Land Use Plan, Monterey County now is standing center stage, as critics question whether county officials will

But Jim Josoff, member of the Coast Property Owners' Association's board of directors, believes there is no excuse for allowing an illegal project to carry on.

"I don't buy this argument that they don't have enough staff," he said. "How many people does it take to write a letter saying what you are doing is illegal?"

be strict enough in protecting the pristine Big Sur coast and its surrounding area from development — both legal and illegal. (Photo by Roger Fremier.)

This problem was recently demonstrated on coastal property owned by Arizona-based attorney John A. Murphy, Jr., where the county District Attorney's office alleges that several miles of dirt roads were illegally graded.

"The Murphy property illegal land use violation is the largest ever in California," said 5th District Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman, referring to reports made by the Coastal Commission staff. "It will undoubtedly have nationwide repercussions because of the massive amount of damage."

The land is bordered on the north near Carmel Valley Road, the south by Palo Colorado Canyon, the west by Highway 1, and the east by Garrapata Redwood Estates.

A lawsuit was filed only after the county spent several months trying to get Murphy to stop his alleged grading activity.

"That it could get that far is just astounding," said Lee Otter, state Coastal Commission planner.

Ellis said that delay happened because certain procedures needed to be followed before the D.A. could be notified.

"Unless you've got a real situation where you can tell the court to get an injunction, it's hard to stop someone who's in the middle of work," Ellis said.

BE THAT as it may, many observers are keeping a keen eye on how strictly the county handles the Murphy case.

"If they drop the ball I think federalization could be resurrected," said Todd Acheson, Palo Colorado Canyon resident and environmental activist. "This is a test case to see if the county can implement the Big Sur Coastal Plan effectively."

Currently the county, in conjunction with several outside agencies, is reviewing an erosion control plan for the alleged development on the Murphy property.

"Politically this is important," said hydrologist John Williams of Carmel Highlands. "If you can build an illegal road and just pay a fine, you can figure that's just the cost of building the road."

While a stop-work order is in place and the property available for inspection by county officials, no fines have been levied.

Otter said the county should give Murphy the stiffest penalty possible and he should provide complete restoration.

"They're (Murphy) assaulting something sacred in the Coastal Act," he said, adding that as much as $5,000 a day per violation can be levied. "They (county) can bring a much stronger penalty."

The Coastal Commission finds itself in limbo when it comes to the Big Sur LCP. A little more than a year ago, the commission transferred power to the county to carry out all of its land use plans.

And while that may sound good on the surface, Otter said there is a great deal of responsibility that goes along with it.

"They're acting on behalf of all the people in California," he said, referring to the county's obligation to carry out the state Coastal Act. "We placed our trust in them."

With that in mind, Otter said county officials should take advantage of any previous experience the Coastal Commission may have.

"I'm encouraging the county to think of the state as a resource," he said. "They don't have to do it (violation enforcement and prevention) alone. They shouldn't get their egos wrapped up in it."

Thus far, Otter does not appear to be too impressed with the county's expertise in the area of land-use plan enforcement.

In addition to the Murphy property violation, Otter referred to land in Palo Colorado Canyon owned by Olaf Lange.

It seems that Lange was deeded two parcels totalling 640 acres. Initially he sought to grade a road on the land, which required a coastal permit.

While waiting for permit approval, Lange went ahead and illegally graded a road on his land, for which he was "red tagged."

Moreover, Lange convinced county counsel J.R. Ramos that an old parcel division used to identify mining claims could be used for lot subdivision.

The county then issued Lange a Certificate of Compliance, which is a document given after the fact that says a parcel was legally created.

That issuance provided more fodder for the coastal staff's skeptical view of the county's abilities.

"It (parcel) was never surveyed; it was not a subdivision; it was only a parcel of land," said Judy Allen, a Coastal Commission

It's now or never

AFTER MORE than three years of relative calm in Big Sur, a significant issue has loomed, one that will likely test the limits of local protection of the Big Sur coast and the ability of Monterey County to do so.

This substantial new issue will test whether the county has the inclination and the wherewithal to stop wanton and illegal uses of lands in Big Sur. It will also put to the test the assurances made more than three years ago that local residents and their legislators will be able to handle development — both legal and illegal — in their own backyard.

This test case revolves around the so-called Murphy property and involves illegal road grading spanning much of the huge 5,000-acre property. (See story on page 1 of this issue.) The county has already filed a lawsuit, but much of the damage may already be done. The next steps the county takes on this issue are crucial to the future of Big Sur.

The battle began in Big Sur more than three years ago, one that pitted local residents and their legislators against what they perceived as a single-minded and dictatorial foe — the federal government.

Leading the way for the feds was none other than a homeboy, California Sen. Pete Wilson, who felt that Big Sur needed "protection" from development and crass commercialism and that the perfect entity to offer this protection would be the federal government. Wilson's bill, S.2159, would have created a "Big Sur National Forest Scenic Area," an action that was roundly booed in Big Sur and the Monterey Peninsula.

Wilson's timing in introducing the bill was curious. The County of Monterey and the Coastal Commission were just finalizing terms of the Big Sur Land Use Plan, a document at least 10 years in the making and the result of painstaking give and take. But Wilson persisted.

"I remain convinced that only a limited and strictly conditioned exercise of federal authority is required to assure that the protections given Big Sur by the LUP are safeguarded against changes which would seriously threaten the existing character of the Big Sur coast," Wilson told the Senate Subcommittee on Public Lands during testimony in Washington D.C. July 31, 1986.

What Wilson didn't bargain for was the vociferous and organized opposition to his plans, from the average citizen to residents organizations such as Friends of the Big Sur Coast to local legislators such as Karin Strasser Kauffman and, later, Rep. Leon Panetta. A coalition of opposition forces was born out of this, eventually to result in the Big Sur Multi-Agency Advisory Council. A group of residents and legislators even travelled to Washington D.C. to testify against the bill to the same subcommittee.

Essentially, what the group told Wilson and the feds was that they could take care of their own in their own backyard and that with the LUP in place it didn't require the dubious protection "federalization" of Big Sur would offer.

"The Big Sur Coast, southward of Carmel, is already protected by the most sophisticated, restrictive land-use controls ever devised in this country. The Wilson bill is not needed, not wanted, and can't be afforded or tolerated if the environment, the present unregimented tourist experience and the lifestyles and culture of the residents of coastal communities are to survive," said a written response to Wilson prepared by Friends of the Big Sur Coast.

With this concerted opposition dogging him at every turn, Wilson, realizing discretion is the better part of valor, dropped his bill like a hot potato. Even now Wilson doesn't want to talk about his failed efforts in Big Sur.

Thus with the ball in its court, where it felt it belonged in the first place, the county has had stewardship of the Big Sur coast for the last three years. The Murphy property is the first major instance in which the county's mettle will be tested. If the county "drops the ball" on this, as one Big Sur resident put it, federalization may rear its ugly head again and those inclined to develop, one way or the other, will do so with impunity.

It's up to the county to tighten down the screws, uphold the Big Sur Land Use Plan, and penalize to the fullest extent of the law, those who are responsible for destruction of the land and environment. If necessary the county needs to make the Murphy case an example for others who mistakenly believe they can destroy the environment and merely chalk it up as the cost of doing business.

As one Coastal Commission official put it, "They're (the county) acting on behalf of all the people in California. We placed our trust in them."

Let's hope Monterey County can return that trust.

Past impressions

Dear Editor:

The enclosed description of Carmel was written by my 84-year-old cousin some 60 years ago when she was on a trip with her then lover. I thought your readers would enjoy reading it. The author is Marcella Saylin.

"The muffled roar of pounding surf tossing crying sea lions about like corks. The quilted pattern of bright yellow sunlight pouring over dark shady pine trees giving the lazy village the appearance of a sleeping spotted leopard. Tingling of glass like bells, mixed with gentle voices stifled by English muffins. The many cool dark cocktail lounges looking like little caves hidden from the revealing sunlight inviting thirsty, pleasure-hunting strangers to feel friendly. The neat bouquets of green shrubbery and profusely colored flowers rambling at all doorways, made one feel more like a guest than a customer of escape."

Water misinformation

Dear Editor:

Disinformation regarding the proportion of water from a new dam which will benefit municipal water users continues to surface, both in public meetings and in print.

It is alleged that only 3 or 4,000 acre feet of the water provided by the larger dam will be for municipal use, about "10 percent" of the new water to be developed. The 90 percent balance, it is alleged, will be solely for environmental purposes, i.e. restoration of the destroyed river banks and the decimated steelhead fishery. These allegations are without basis in fact and, to be blunt, are blatant falsehoods!

Council concerned about loss of city's trees

By NANCY HILLS

"SPARE THAT tree!" may be the cry of the Carmel City Council when it considers a new tree cutting ordinance at its next meeting.

The new law would require that property owners get a permit before cutting down any pine, cypress, California oak or redwood tree with a trunk of 19 inches in circumference or greater as measured 4 feet above the base of the tree, or 6 inches in diameter.

City forester Gary Kelly estimates pines of that size are trees of about 30 feet to 35 feet, taller than a two-story house, and about 20 years old.

The council will review the ordinance at its meeting starting at 4 p.m., Tuesday, April 3 in Carpenter Hall at Sunset Center.

Currently, the city's only law on tree cutting says that a property owner must get permission to cut down a tree before construction.

The same law, however, states that the property owner may cut down the tree or trees without a permit if they wait six months before starting construction.

That has happened on lots where the planning and/or forestry commission have requested that the property owner redesign a house to accommodate the trees.

"This (new) ordinance is designed to close that six-month loophole," Kelly said.

The ordinance would also ensure that options to tree removal, such as pruning, are discussed before the permanent action of killing the tree.

"I think it is important to point out that we are not prohibiting them from cutting down a tree, just stating they must get a permit," forestry commissioner Lindsey Hanna said.

A tree survey conducted by the city forestry commission has shown that the California coast natural "upper canopy" trees, such as pine trees, which are associated with wild forests, are decreasing on private property and are being replaced by "exotics" such as flowering plum, fruit trees and Japanese maple.

"The 'lofty' pine and other upper canopy trees is what creates the 'village in the forest' environment," Kelly said. "If we change to trees that only grow as tall as the houses, that creates a very different atmosphere."

Another growing concern is that the average lot in Carmel, 40 feet by 100 feet, leaves little room for new trees now that most houses are built to maximum size. To build those homes, many times mature trees have to be removed.

The city is also losing trees to construction itself, which can cause unintentional damage to trees, even if protected. Kelly explained that paving open ground, which eliminates watering patterns, and compacting the earth around the tree, can stress it to the point it will die.

"Just living in an urban environment is unnatural for these trees," Kelly said.

Pacific Grove for 25 years has had a similar tree cutting ordinance for almost all types of trees. The city recently tightened it to include permits for pruning, according to PG public works director Bob Rhodes. The fine for a violation was also increased from $50 to $500.

"It works very well," Rhodes said.

HANNA EXPLAINED that the reason behind the ordinance and city's concern was "very simple."

"We are losing our upper canopy," he said. "Our feeling in the forestry commission is in 50 years all the trees are going to be gone if we don't do something."

Kelly said that the tree survey indicates that about 298 pines alone have been removed on private property in the past 17 years. Statistics show that every year the number is increasing.

In the year 1975, there were 32 requests for tree removal, but in 1988 there were 119.

Planners nix new hotels, want direction on new condos

By NANCY HILLS

THE CARMEL Planning Commission approved a general plan amendment that prohibits new hotels and motels in the city, but balked at approving a similar change that would prohibit condominiums.

March 7 the Carmel City Council had instructed the planning commission to clarify the general plan direction concerning permitting new hotels and motels in town.

At its March 22 meeting the commission clarified the policy on motels and hotels to read that new accommodations are prohibited, but hesitated doing the same for condominiums, requesting that the council expand on its reasons for the prohibition.

The issue of condominiums arose when an applicant, Cedric Choi, requested that the commission rule on whether new condominiums were allowed in the R-4 district. Choi had purchased property on Mission Street between Fourth and Fifth avenues and planned four condos for the site.

Though the commission had agreed in its R-4 specific plan to ban condominiums, that plan has yet to be approved. The code currently does allow for condominiums, but the wording in the general plan is ambiguous.

If there is a conflict between the general plan and the ordinance, the general plan takes precedence and the ordinance must be changed to comply.

Most of the commissioners felt that the effect of condominiums on the city had not been studied enough and that the multi-family buildings provide a unique form of home ownership in Carmel that would be eliminated if construction of new ones were prohibited.

Commission chairman Olof Dahlstrand led the discussion by stating he had no problem with the prohibition of new hostels, but the reason for prohibiting condominiums was unclear.

"In almost every community the suburban investors have opted for condominiums as a way to get low-cost housing," Dahlstrand said. "When you compare the payment on a condominium to rental of apartments they are sometimes comparable, in fact, they might be able to afford monthly payments" and not the rent.

Commissioner Carla Ramsey added that eliminating condominiums also eliminates creative buying opportunities made available with condominiums that are not available with houses.

"Maybe we should just develop densities for condos," she said.

Commissioner Jack Kennedy agreed that he could not "see prohibiting them." He was supported by commissioner Bill Brown, who said, "I don't understand (the ban)."

When asked the reasons the council decided to prohibit condominiums, Planning Director Diane White explained that councilmembers felt condominiums were more easily turned into timeshares and short-term rentals.

Commissioner Stephen Poohar explained that he had voted against the Choi request because he believed that the council's decision and past policy made the vote against condominiums "a slam dunk decision."

Poohar disagreed that condominiums were cheaper than apartments because people have to come up with cash for downpayments and many condominiums are very expensive in this area — around $300,000.

Commissioner Fred Keeble queried White again when the vote came around to him concerning the basis for the general plan amendment.

"What is the reason for this? I would like to have a reason," Keeble said.

White said that "initially the concern was one of design" but from "day one" condominiums were not considered appropriate to the city.

In a preference between apartments and condominiums, a check of a recent census shows that 40 percent of the housing stock in Carmel is rented.

"That area seems to be provided for," White said.

The commission decided to solve the problem by asking the city council if it would clarify its position before the commission clarifies the general plan.

In other business, the commission:

- Approved changes to the code which would allow the expansion of existing restaurants in the residential commercial district but prohibit the addition of new ones.

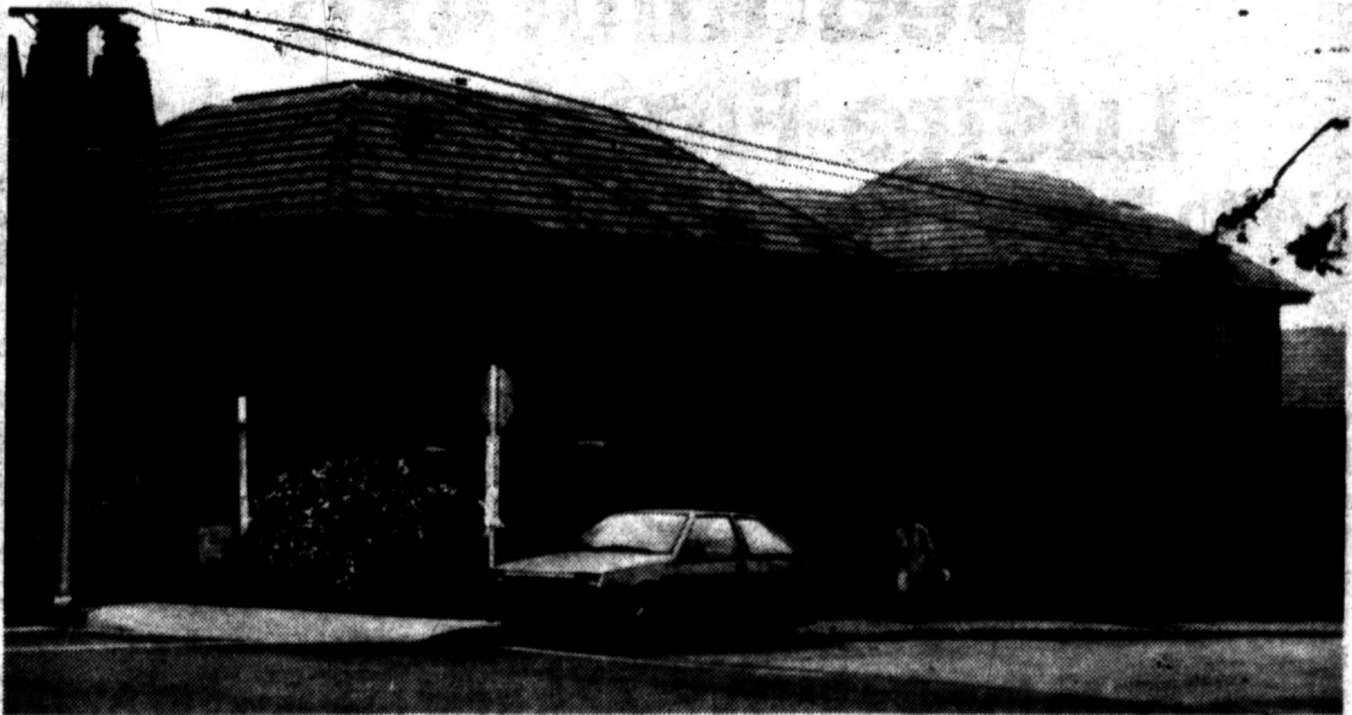

- Approved the concept of a two-story residential care facility near the corner of Lincoln Street and Eighth Avenue.

- Approved substantial design changes to Earl Walls' buildings under construction on Junipero Street, but chastized Walls for going ahead with the changes without commission approval.

"I think the public should know this is not the way to go about this," Dahlstrand said.

Ramsey and Poohar cast the dissenting votes.

"There were a lot of hours spent by the staff and commission on the original design," Ramsey said.

THE CHIMNEYS complex on Junipero and Fourth avenues is one of the last condominium projects in Carmel. The Carmel Planning Commission is now questioning a ban on any new ones, something being considered by the city council. (Mac McDonald photo.)

mit. Only the tree survey gives any indication of how many have been cut down, Kelly said. The number of trees lost to Carmel could be higher, he said, but those who request tree removal through the forestry commission must replace the destroyed trees with new ones.

The new ordinance would increase the replacement of lost trees because all removals that get a permit would probably be accompanied by the provision that there must be a new tree planted to replace the one lost, Kelly said.

The forestry commission usually grants permission to cut down a tree because it is within the proposed footprint for a structure, he said in explanation of the 75 percent approval rate.

MAYOR JEAN Jean Grace said she had not seen the ordinance but 6 inches in diameter seemed "awfully small" to her. She also said that she was not certain the city was losing its upper canopy.

"I would also like to see the statistics on how many of those lost were at the end of their life span anyway, or diseased," she said. "I don't know, their concerns may be a little overblown."

A chief critic of the ordinance is former Councilman Bob Evans.

"I think you have to start with property rights," Evans said. "Whether or not a property owner wants a tree in his yard I think should be up to him."

Evans questioned how many trees have actually been needlessly destroyed over the years, citing disease and age as two factors that may account for the reduction in numbers.

Evans said that "some people regard trees as a storm menace, others have them cracking their foundations. Sometimes they thought the tree was nice when they planted it but found it blocked their view or sunlight for their roses which they would rather have."

"I question to what extent it will benefit the upper canopy. It is not a very large number of trees subtracted from the forest. This is a case of 'if it ain't broke then don't fix it.'"

The law may actually discourage people from planting upper canopy trees if they know they have to face stricter regulations once they are grown, Evans said.

Though other cities throughout the state have similar laws "that doesn't make it good," he said.

"I'm not suggesting that there aren't some reasons for the ordinance, but I think we're shooting at a fly with an elephant gun," Evans said.

"I don't think we are losing (the forest) or to the extent we are losing it is a minor and a small price to pay for preserving our freedom," he said.

Ironically, on the same agenda the council will hear an appeal of a permit to cut down a 50-year-old pine on Fourth Avenue between Torres and Santa Fe streets to make way for a house.

One of the appellants, Margaret White, said she won't tie herself to the tree if the appeal is turned down, but she hopes that it will encourage the owners to redesign their home a little.

"The tree is right on the property line," she explained. "I just think we need to keep our upper canopy trees. If we don't do something, we won't have any."

In other business, the council will:

- Hear an appeal by Daniels & House con-

County ability to protect Big Sur will be tested counsel, who worked on the matter several years ago. "This is just crazy, this certificate is just improper."

If adopted by the Monterey County Planning Commission as valid, the certificate allows a project to avoid being heard under the more strict rules governing subdivisions, and requires only an administrative review for permit approval.

"The county made a legal error and admitted to us it made a legal error," Allen said, adding that the mishap coincided with the transference of the land use plans to the county.

"They were able to hide behind their erroneous legal decision," she said. "They said, 'We've already ruled on this and that's the way it is.'"

The Lange issue is scheduled to be heard by the planning commission on April 26.

"That's another example of relying on the county to enforce violations," Otter said.

Also looming on the horizon for the county planning process is a parcel in Garrapta Canyon called Rocky Creek Ranch.

The owners of that land are seeking a lot line adjustment, which will change the configuration of the parcels to allow more extensive development.

"help define and refine the federal role in the Big Sur coast area," he said.

BUT NO matter how lax the county seems to be in enforcing the Big Sur Local Coastal Plan, most residents stop short of calling in the federal government.

"The LCP is not that old at this point," said Josoff, who is currently leading a fight against a proposed federal bill that would establish a nationwide network of "scenic" highways. "This is a time of change and of learning."

"Unless you've got a real situation where you can tell the court to get an injunction, it's hard to stop someone who's in the middle of work. By the time we get a complaint the work is done."

— Dale Ellis

— Zoning administrator

Josoff also suggested that the county create a watchdog agency to oversee development on the Big Sur coast.

Mike Caplin, vice president of the Coast Property Owners' Association, said any solution rests with the people of the area.

"It's not the county; it's not the Coastal Commission or the federal government," he said. "It's the community."

He said the people are in charge of carrying out the land use plan and that is precisely why residents worked so hard to keep the federal government out of Big Sur three years ago.

"I would shudder to think what sort of land use plan we would get from the distance of Washington, D.C.," said Strasser Kauffman. "I would much rather trust local voters to effect policy making."

Ellis said his department has been guilty of giving offenders too much time before imposing harsher measures.

No more Mr. Nice Guy.

"It's starting to pay some dividends," he said of recent enforcement measures.

Caplin said locals will continue to monitor county officials, making sure the land use plan stays intact.

"On a local level it's possible to make them move if they're dragging their feet," he said.

The message has made it as far as Washington, where Wilson has decided not to reintroduce any legislation at this time, according to spokesman Bill Livingston.

Valley man heads project to help children in need

By DAVID LELAND

LIKE THE weather, bad news is something most people talk about but often hesitate before taking any positive action to improve the situation.

'We can make the difference in the lives of these special young people through our community efforts to generate support for research and treatment.'

— John Muth

But after Carmel Valley resident John Muth watched television coverage of an 8-year-old AIDS victim being shuffled a great distance to a facility where he eventually died, he sprung into action.

"There is no children's medical center in this area and no counseling services for grief-stricken families," explains Muth.

With that in mind, Muth, who also serves as daytime concierge at the Stonepine Resort, now finds himself serving as general director of the Dawn Project.

"I find a lot of times people are blaming the child (for terminal diseases such as AIDS)," says Muth, who is unmarried and has no children. "It's not the child's fault."

In its infancy, so to speak, the Dawn Project, once established, will contribute 81 percent of all proceeds, evenly divided, to research for AIDS, Salinas Valley Hospice (which includes children's services), and to Children's Services Center in Monterey.

In addition to providing facilities for terminally ill children, the Dawn Project will also assist youngsters who need foster or adoptive families because of abandonment, neglect or abuse in their own families.

"We can make the difference in the lives of these special young people through our community efforts to generate support for research and treatment," says Muth.

Muth says he also hopes to establish a center locally for terminally ill children, or possibly create a similar wing at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula.

"We talk about children being the hope of our world, but current statistics are a sad commentary on how we treat children," says Muth. "The savage attitude and neglect of abused and unwanted children, the hopelessness and perhaps confusion in not understanding disease, contribute nothing. This problem will not go away — it's a global disaster."

Rounding out the non-profit Dawn Project staff is Henrietta Smith Lockwood, fundraiser; Keith Wightman, treasurer; Pat Grace, events director; and Melissa Taylor, bank reference for Wells Fargo Bank.

The first order of business, Muth says, is to establish a sound financial base for the operation. Along with a national mail campaign, which includes senators, governors and major corporations, the Dawn Project is planning a two-day fund-raising event.

On the evening of Friday, June 16, and Saturday, June 17, the Dawn Project will present Horse & Buggy Days fund-raiser.

During the evening of June 16 at Hidden Valley Music Seminars in Carmel Valley, there will be a dinner dance with a country & western band.

On June 17 from 1 to 5 p.m. at the Stonepine Equestrian Center, the Dawn Project will present a troupe of professional riders, ropers, shooters and horses.

Muth says the staff of the Dawn Project has set a fund-raising goal of $100,000 for the two-day event.

He adds that the Dawn Project is having a kick-off party from 6 to 8 p.m. Saturday.

Caution urged in return to daylight time

AS THE nation returns to Daylight-Saving Time on Sunday, April 2, the California State Automobile Association (AAA) advises motorists to use extra caution when driving.

For the third consecutive year, the clock is being moved forward one hour on the first Sunday in April, instead of the last Sunday, to conform with 1986 federal legislation.

CSAA officials suggest that the one-hour time change may contribute toward additional driving hazards.

The CSAA urges motorists to follow these driving suggestions:

- Be sure to turn on headlights if you are driving during the early hours in darkness. And remember to turn off the lights when you reach your destination.

- Watch out for children going to school in the early morning darkness.

- Be prepared for reduced visibility caused by fog, haze, drizzle or other pre-daylight factors.

- Watch out for joggers and other pedestrians, who may be difficult to see in the early daylight hours.

- Wear sunglasses and adjust sun visors properly to combat the glare caused by the sun's early morning reflection on windshield, hood or other shiny car parts.

- To cut down on glare, clean interiors and exteriors of windshields.

- It's a good idea to reduce speed if there is sun glare. Drivers may not be able to see the brakelights of a car ahead that is slowing down.

- In the late afternoon, watch out for bicyclists, children and others attracted by the longer daylight hours.

KNOWN BY THE COMPANIES WE KEEP

Saks Fifth Avenue

Geraldine Naditz' dark hair is cleanly swept under, she wears a simple navy dress and just the right touch of gold at her ears. She sits in her soft beige office in the lower floor of Saks Fifth Avenue. She has just moved to Carmel from New York, where she was American Designer Collection buyer for Saks. She loves her new job as general manager. And she loves living in Carmel. "I've always been an outdoor enthusiast", she says. She grew up in San Francisco. And while she no longer surfs, she still skis, goes clamming, and watches the grunion run in San Luis Obispo when she can. A combination of fantasy and dress-up as a child, and a Fine Arts and Liberal Arts major in college, may have led her to the fashion industry. "It opened my eyes to beauty, environmental concepts, the music of life and the joy of possession", she says. Geraldine says no two days are alike in her job. And as she sees it, her biggest challenge will be to "answer the needs of the community in a fashionable and traditional manner." She says of Saks' Image, "It's the thing everyone talks about—a return to the classic apparel that has longevity. We're certainly going away from the influence of trendy obsolescence."

BRENTANO'S
THE EXTRAORDINARY BOOKSTORE

Sometimes all a person knows is the color of the book they're looking for—no author, no title—when they walk into Brentano's bookstore. And the staff is happy to help out. Most of them are bibliophiles themselves. Manager John Juster says they cater to people who love to read anything from autos to Aristotle. He says people have less time to read literary books nowadays so they carry a large selection of popular fiction. Brentano's history is colorful. It started in 1853 when Austrian immigrant August Brentano set up a newsstand in front of the New York Hotel. By 1870 Brentano's bookstore was a New York landmark where browsers included Ralph Waldo Emerson, Charles Dickens and General U.S. Grant. Hospitality was key to the business and it's rumored that August used to welcome all of his customers at the door. Juster is also fascinated with customers, be they locals, tourists or foreigners. He likes his job because the product is always changing and no two books are really alike. One could easily spend an afternoon in reverie exploring the multitude of books in this spacious and well-organized store.

Gift Garden

When you enter the Gift Garden it's like walking into a garden of Eden of gifts. On a sunny day, crystal in the front window throws rainbows onto whimsical stuffed toys, porcelain-faced dolls, singing coffee mugs, exquisite tea cups, carousels, clowns, cards ... the list goes on ad infinitum. Obviously, this is not a store to be hurried through. On any given day you're likely to see owner Doris Demetre dusting and polishing the myriad of gifts she has collected from around the world. You'd expect that Doris began collecting as a child. Rather, she said she began collecting business as an adult. It started with a day care nursery, then a plant nursery. Later, it was a tire and a flower business when she and her husband Art lived in Hawaii. There was even a wig and beauty shop. the Demetres have been in the gift business for 20 years—13 of them in Carmel Plaza. They've whittled their collection down to the Gift Garden and a passive exercise salon, Trim'n Tone, in Pacific Grove. Doris says there are a lot of love items in her store. And the special gifts she's chosen show a labor of love, too. If you can't find a gift here—for anybody, any age—you won't find it anywhere.

The BIB'N TUCKER

Bib 'n Tucker is Willa Aylalan's baby. Her husband Ernest, a Carmel dentist, is out of it. They even leave the men at home when she and her daughter Wendy Grover, go to market in the Big Apple. Willa first purchased the 40 year old Ocean Avenue store about 13 years ago. She had five children and this accounts for her expertise in selecting clothing for infants through seven years old. Her newly acquired Carmel Plaza store is bright and airy and chock full of the very best in children's clothing and playthings. There are Elegant Baby headbands, posh appliqued warm-up suits, angelic frocks of satin and lace for the girls and jeans 'n jackets for the boys. And that's not all. There are sleepers, giant giraffes, Gund stuffed animals, charming hats, even audio cassette tapes. Willa says parents are reluctant to spend much money on children's clothing these days. That's why she goes to the ends of the earth to find appealing items. Temporarily, she has put aside painting children's portraits. But she hopes one day to incorporate a gallery in her store.

Agencies join forces to help protect harbor seals

By DAVID LELAND

WITH A little bit of luck and a lot of cooperation by Pebble Beach

'We are fortunate to have these unique animals nest along our local beaches, but we must work to be less enthusiastic in approaching the area. Our urgency ordinance should soon alert and educate the public so that only a minimum of enforcement will be required.'

— Karin Strasser Kauffman

residents and tourists, the next six weeks will be productive ones for area harbor seals.

Last year, for the first time, about 95 harbor seals chose to give birth to their pups along a 1-mile radius of Fanshell and Cypress beaches in the Del Monte Forest.

The problem: these critters are painfully shy and do an abrupt about-face when people impinge on their activities.

"They're not like the elephant seal," said Jim Bennett, Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals spokesman.

Those people who have travelled to Ano Nuevo State Park, located north of Santa Cruz, to view the massive elephant seals giving birth know that, short of an earthquake, the seals are impervious to any commotion.

Not so with harbor seals.

"Harbor seals will go the other way (into the ocean)," Bennett said. "The mom will go the other way at any indication of disturbance."

When a seal retreats to the sea from the beach she either abandons her live pup or, in her haste and fear, rolls over her new pup and crushes it.

In an attempt to prevent any tragedies, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors, SPCA and Pebble Beach Co. are making a concerted effort to protect the seals.

The board passed an urgency ordinance this week to further protect the harbor seal, which will be enforced by the SPCA and the Pebble Beach Co.

While state legislation is now being pursued to provide protection from harassment to harbor seals and their pups, current law is not sufficiently precise enough to provide adequate protection.

"We are fortunate to have these unique animals nest along our local beaches, but we must work to be less enthusiastic in approaching the area," said 5th District Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman. "Our urgency ordinance should soon alert and educate the public so that only a minimum of enforcement will be required."

Bennett said that if a harbor seal is bothered, she will not return to that particular beach. He added that there is no other nesting area for the harbor seal along local beaches.

"We want her to stay there and nurse her pups," he said.

While the birthing season does not officially begin until April, running through mid-May, Bennett said there are already seals off Fanshell Beach "poking up their heads."

The Pebble Beach Co. forestry division has installed a fence around the area, which blocks off the parking lot and beach. There is no stopping or parking at the beach.

There is, however, limited access for photographers and interested people at Cypress Beach.

Bennett cautioned against making noise or trying to get too close for that memorable picture.

"We don't want the harbor seals to sense that people are there," he said.

Last year, people climbed over barriers and fences to get a closer look. That, Bennett said, is a poor way to treat a "natural resource."

With that in mind, he is relying on strict enforcement, rather than expecting people to change their ways or to heed signs and fences.

"If you tell somebody not to do something, they're bound and determined to do it," he said.

COUNTY SUPERVISORS, SPCA and the Pebble Beach Co. have banded together in an effort to protect mother harbor seals while they give birth at Fanshell and Cypress beaches in Pebble Beach.

The Pebble Beach Co. has posted an international symbol protecting the seal on fences imploring people to stay out. The appeal is made in English, Japanese, Spanish, German and Vietnamese.

Supes blast process that allowed Meadows house

By DAVID LELAND

COUNTY SUPERVISORS this week sharply criticized an administrative process that bypassed public input, allowing a building permit to be issued for a 5,000-square-foot Carmel Meadows home.

At the same time, the board upheld (4-1, with 2nd District Supervisor Barbara Shipnuck dissenting), an appeal by a group of about 20 Carmel Meadows residents that asked that the same permit, issued last November by the Monterey County Planning Commission, be revoked.

Shipnuck said she was dissenting "to show (for the record), that this is a complicated and confused process."

The lot and plans are owned by Claude Keyzers, who proposed a two-story single family home on the northeast side of Calle La Cruz.

Specifically, the board took offense with a procedure it initiated last year as part of a streamlining of the county's permit process. That action allows the county planning director the option of issuing certain variances.

The local coastal plan's viewshed policy states that a house cannot be built on a lot with more than a 30-percent slope unless there is no other way to build, or the environment would benefit by the house being built in a steeper portion of the lot.

In this instance, Planning Director Bob Slimmon personally issued a variance to Keyzers, allowing a portion of the house to be built on a more than 60-percent slope.

Before Slimmon issued the variance, the planning commission had allowed the frontyard setback to be reduced so Keyzers could have more room to build.

"You can't have it both ways," said 5th District Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman, referring to the idea that the reduction of the setback would replace the need to build on the steeper area of the lot.

Keyzers testified that when he purchased the lot in 1986 he was never told of any slope specifications.

"I took all the prudent steps one would take to ensure a good project," he said. "The last thing I wanted to do was to create a furor. Little did I dream that there would be this type of reaction from the neighbors."

Keyzers' plans for an almost 24-foot roof were not affected by a recent 18-foot height limit set by the board because his permit was already on file when the height limitations were adopted.

KEYZERS TESTIFIED that, thus far, he has spent about $30,000 on architectural design and various geographical tests on the land.

Michael Albov, representing the Carmel Meadows residents, told the board that Slimmon misled planning commissioners into believing that they had approved Keyzers' design and the variance, when in fact they had asked to review any final drawings.

"It was a misunderstanding between staff and the planning commission," he said. "There was never a proper, legal design review."

Albov took issue with Slimmon issuing the variance in the first place.

"Presumably if you have a big enough house on a small enough lot you can get a variance for anything," he said.

Keyzers' attorney Anthony Lombardo, however, told the board that the lot is not naturally as steep as it looks, much of the dirt creating the slope was dumped there.

"The natural slope of the land is less than 30 percent," he said. "The current design is the only way this project can be developed in a safe manner."

But supervisors were not swayed by Lombardo's arguments.

"It's a very large house on a problem lot in the critical viewshed," Strasser Kauffman said. "We've not adequately seen a slope waiver policy applied."

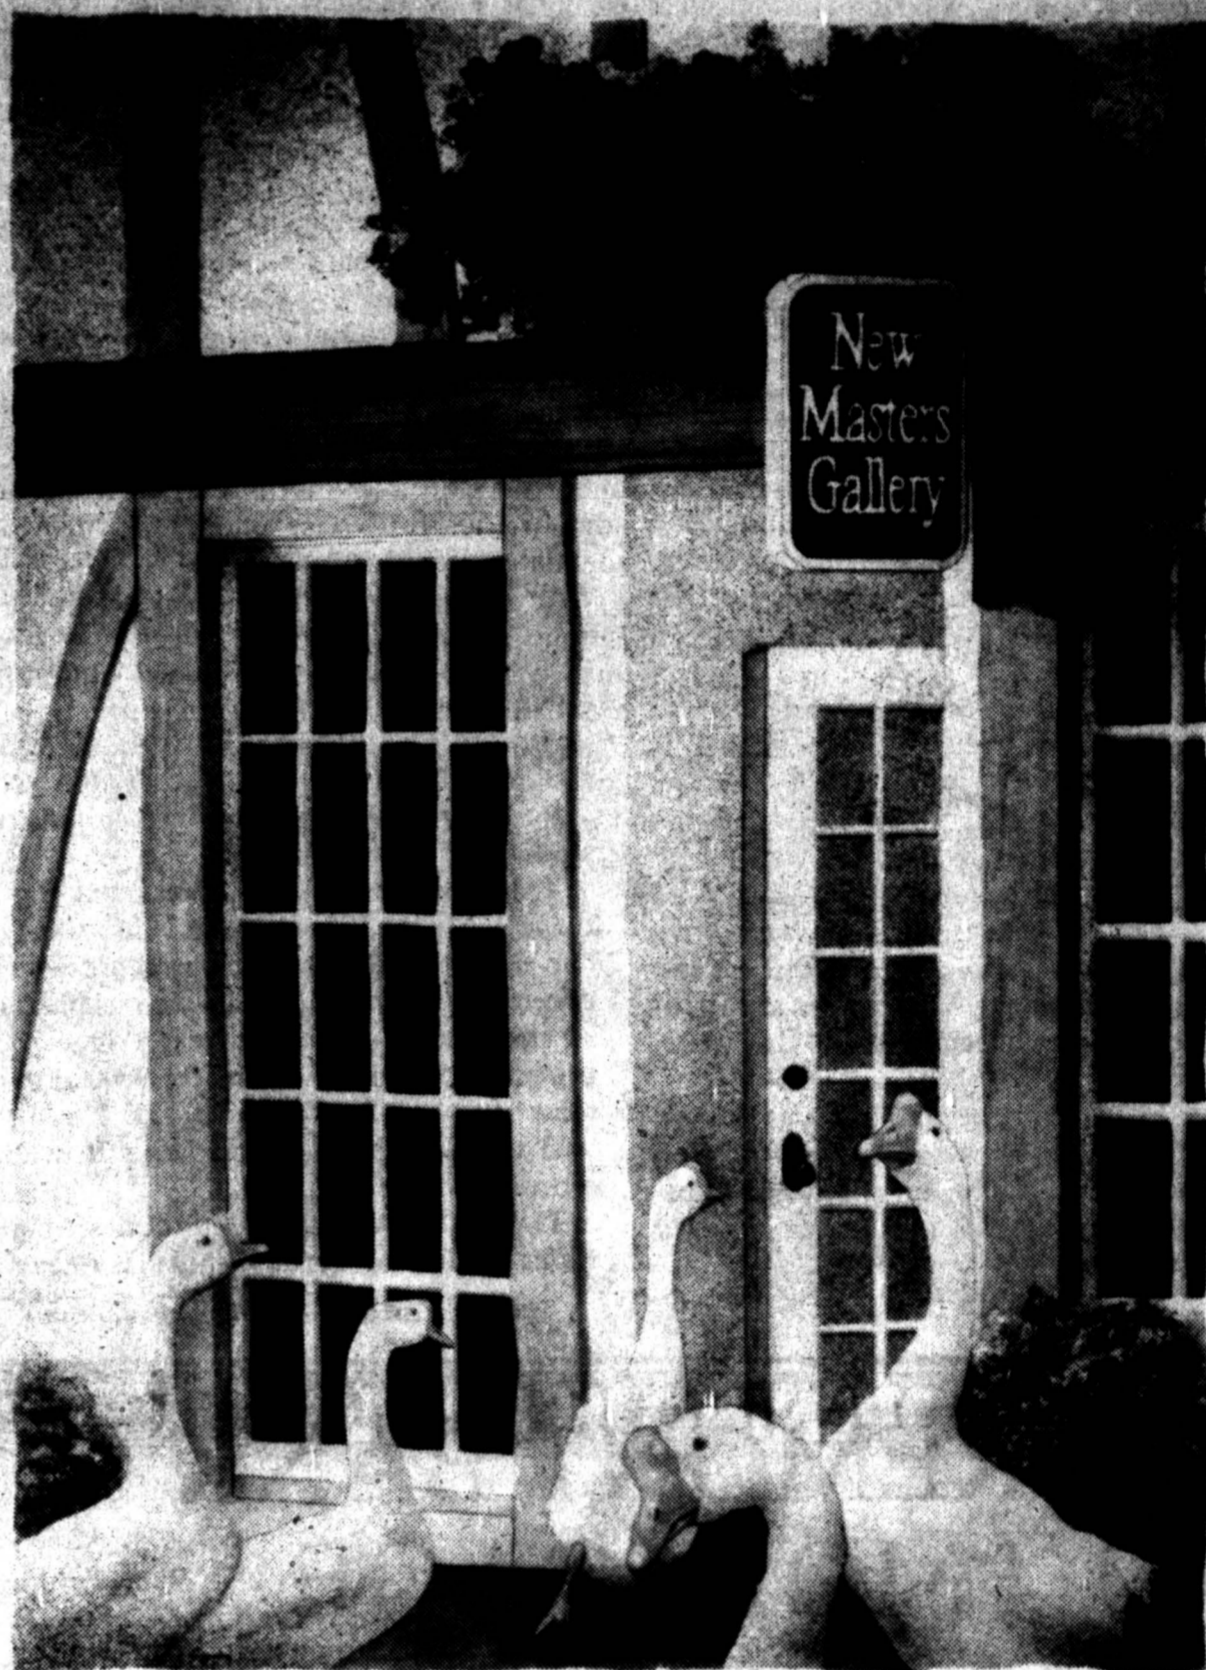

First District Supervisor Marc Del Piero agreed.

"When permits are issued administratively, the level of scrutiny declines," he said.

The board will review criteria for granting administrative permits at 3 p.m. Tuesday, April 18, in the supervisors chambers in Salinas.

CVPOA protests valley water rights agreement

By NANCY HILLS

THE CARMEL Valley Property Owners Association is protesting a proposed water rights agreement between the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District and five major Carmel Valley water pumpers.

Members of the CVPOA board voted to protest the agreement in a meeting in which pumpers representatives agreed to drop one of the most disputed provisions of the settlement.

The proposed water rights agreement has stirred protests since it was first announced at the water district's March meeting, but representatives of the pumpers agreed they would drop a provision that allows them to sell their water rights to others if it would settle the controversy.

The agreement will come before the water board at its meeting Monday, April 10.

The amount of water granted to the private pumpers was a source of conflict not resolved at the meeting.

The agreement has also generated much commentary and accusations of conflict of interest against water board chairman Nick Lombardo, president of Rancho Canada Golf Club. Lombardo says he has not talked to district staff about the negotiations nor has he been involved in any of the meetings on the issue.

Under the agreement, Rancho Canada would get 935 acre feet a year to irrigate its two golf courses. That is about 100 acre feet more than last year, when his water use generated much controversy.

"That is almost as much water as the city of Carmel-by-the-Sea uses," said water director Dick Heuer, who has led the protest against the agreement. Heuer was a part of the closed session discussion on the settlement.

Heuer states that the number was arrived at by the maximum historic use of water on the properties. (Actually, Rancho Canada used 1,010 acre feet in 1984, according to district records.)

Heuer also questioned why this agreement was coming before the water board at this time.

"There is no urgency," he said.

The agreement provides water for the property owners' developments even if the dam project is delayed. Heuer said a state Water Resources Control Board representative for this area agrees that it is premature (see related story this issue.)

The five private pumpers involved are Rancho Canada Golf Club, Carmel Valley Golf and Country Club, Carmel Valley Ranch, Leonard and Emily Williams farm land and Hacienda Carmel Community Association.

The agreement states that the five private pumpers have the right to use up to 3.8 acre feet per acre on their property and that they have the right to sell or assign the water right, even to parties outside Carmel Valley.

"I think there are a number of issues that are absolutely crucial to Carmel Valley," former water board member Patricia Bernardi told the CVPOA board.

She identified the selling of the water rights outside the valley and the amount of water the private pumpers get as two of the most important of those issues.

"It makes them mini-Cal-Ams," she said.

The opposition to the agreement was represented at the meeting by director Dick Heuer, former director Pat Bernardi, a statement from 5th District Supervisor and water director Karin Strasser Kauffman and Robert Greenwood of CVPOA.

Strasser Kauffman, through a written statement, said she was strongly opposed to any agreement that allowed water rights to be sold outside the valley.

The pumpers were represented by attorneys Myron Etienne and Anthony Lombardo. The Williams were also represented by contractor Alan Williams, who has planned a service center on the property. One of the property owners, Ed Haber, was also present.

Water district general manager Bruce Buel represented the district.

The CVPOA board identified selling the water outside of Carmel Valley as one of the Peninsula Water Management District and five Carmel Valley private pumpers. Lombardo is the chairman of the water board. (Mac McDonald photo.)

main provisions they opposed.

The CVPOA is developing its final draft of the protest but the board agreed that:

- Questioned whether the agreement was premature since the district was still working on its water supply project.

- Some commented that they particularly objected to the agreement coming before the board just as the environmental impact report on the allocation system is being released.

- It objected to a provision that allows the sale or transfer of more water from the Carmel Valley aquifer.

- Questioned whether riparian rights can be transferred from one property to another parcel, even within Carmel Valley.

- Questioned whether the method of determining the amount of water granted by the agreement is excessive and more than the pumpers are actually using.

- Questioned that the agreement gives preferential treatment during water rationing. The agreement states that the pumpers cannot be rationed more than 40 percent.

- Stated that any action that appears to grant special privileges to five individual pumpers is completely unacceptable.

Both Bernardi and Heuer stated that the provision to transfer or sell the water rights was not a part of negotiations to settle the agreement before the new board was elected in 1987. That contention was not disputed by any others at the meeting.

TWO PROJECTS that may get water from this agreement are a proposed 175-room hotel at Rancho Canada and a 56-unit residential project near Quail Lodge.

The Williams have a service center planned for their property, but it is currently being challenged on basis of traffic and other growth issues.

In exchange for formalizing that right, the pumpers will drop a water rights protest filed with the state Water Resources Control Board in 1983 and will permit the district to meter their wells and ration water consumption during an emergency.

They will also agree to pay the district's substantial connection fee if they hook up to California-American Water Co.

Selling their water rights to Cal-Am is one way the pumpers can get potable water for uses other than irrigation if there is a water meter connection moratorium in progress due to overpumping the aquifer.

That will be a subject for the water board to consider when it reviews the allocation EIR.

The protest could be used to delay any final permits for a water supply project on the Carmel River.

Attorneys Lombardo and Etienne reiterated their contention that their clients have received nothing in this agreement that is not within the rights of their clients and that four of their clients have no intention of selling the water. Only the Williams have shown any interest in that provision.

All the private pumpers currently use water they pump from the ground to either irrigate their golf courses, landscape or to water crops, and have done so for years.

They are just five of at least 40 private pumpers in the valley, though they are by far the largest private pumpers. (California-American Water Co. is the largest pumper in the valley.)

The pumpers claim that they have exercised those rights for years and in fact used more water in the past when it was agriculture and farm land.

Their clients filed the protest to ensure that the water district did not take the water rights they have held for years.

FLOW FROM the Carmel River by March 28 had reached just past the bridge at Rancho San Carlos Road, still some 4½ miles from the ocean. A water rights agreement concerning river water has been called "premature" by a state water official. (Mac McDonald photo.)

State water official says water agreement premature

By NANCY HILLS

STATE WATER Resources Control Board representative said that a hotly contested water rights agreement between the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District and five major private pumpers in Carmel Valley is "probably premature."

There is also some question whether the agreement's provisions would survive a

"If it had come about when the draft environmental impact report (on the dam), was released, then I would not then had the notion to say it was premature."

— Steve Herrera

review by the state water board.

Representatives of the private pumpers offered to drop a provision that they could sell their water rights in an effort to settle the disputed agreement that would give an entitlement of water to the Monterey Peninsula water board chairman and four other Carmel Valley private pumpers.

The offer came at a meeting between representatives of both sides of the issue at a special Carmel Valley Property Owners Association board meeting March 28.

Whether the private pumpers have the right to sell the water is also under dispute.

The water rights or water the pumpers may sell of transfer are based on long-standing riparian rights, legal representatives of the pumpers maintain. It is also based on considering the water in Carmel Valley as percolated groundwater and not underflow, or water that moves from one location to another.

State Water Resources Control Board guidelines state that riparian rights cannot be transferred from the property or used on non-riparian land. Riparian land is land along a stream bed or that overlies a well-defined underground stream.

Additionally, the state water board has yet to determine whether the Carmel aquifer is groundwater or underflow.

Steve Herrera of the state water board told The Carmel Pine Cone that he had not seen the agreement, but from what he understood he felt that the district "was probably premature in settling this, given recent developments" on the peninsula and with the district's proposed water supply project.

"If it had come about when the draft environmental impact report (on the dam), was released, then I would not then had the notion to say it was premature," Herrera said.

Recent developments include the change a couple of months ago of the district's proposed project, from New San Clemente Dam to New Los Padres.

The district began negotiating an agreement to reduce the number of water rights protests that will come before the state water board during a hearing on the proposed dam. Any protests can hold up the completion of the project.

The five protestors filed their protest with the state water board in 1983.

The state board can usurp any agreement made by the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District, or any local agency, Herrera explained.

The state board prefers to deal with the question of water rights in Carmel Valley at the same time it conducts a hearing on the water district's water supply project, Herrera said.

Doing both combines the process, he explained, rather than having two separate hearings.

The state board must declare whether or not the water in the aquifer in Carmel Valley is underflow or groundwater. If it is groundwater, then the state board has no jurisdiction in the matter.

"It is just who has the biggest straw," he said.

Groundwater is basically water that stays in one place or is like an underground lake. The overlying property owner's use does not have the same impact on a downstream user as underflow does.

Underflow is an underground stream that flows along in a defined channel and its benefits are enjoyed and shared by all lands above its course.

If the Carmel Valley aquifer is declared underflow, the state board will determine who can use how much — it will divvy up or give an appropriation to each water users in the valley, including California-American Water Co.

If the state board declares the water in Carmel Valley underflow, it will make the agreement null and void, a situation all parties agree to and is written into the document.

The fears of the opponents of the agreement is that projects which plan to use that water to build and grow will be constructed and already using water.

"What are they going to do, tear a hotel down?" asked Dick Heuer, water district boardmember and opponent of the agreement.

Herrera, however, said he believed the pumpers are taking a risk with this agreement and denies any project has to be delivered water, unless it is for domestic use.

In other words, Rancho Canada could build a hotel, but it may not get any water if the agreement is eliminated by the state water board.

Herrera said that state board could also change the agreement in any way.

Water rights and underflow issues, as well as agreements such as this one, are becoming more common as water becomes a scarce resource.

"When it was plentiful, nobody bothered," he said.

Many prior decisions are coming up again for review and the rulings on those agreements, some of them major water supply projects in California, will also affect what happens here on the Monterey Peninsula, he said.

Valley gearing up for big 100th anniversary shindig

CARMEL VALLEY will celebrate its 100 years of history in a gala three-day observance centering in the village area from Aug. 4 through 6 according to elaborate plans now being formed by a civic centennial group of volunteers.

The group has created more than a dozen committees working under the guidance of Randy Randazzo, village community leader, who has been named chairman of the event.

"We are mounting the best, biggest and boldest community party ever held in the valley," Randazzo said. "In the variety of its offerings and the scope of its coverage it will offer something of interest to every valley citizen...and we hope they will all take part."

Theme for the centennial adopted by the committee is: "Carmel Valley Centennial—Rich History—Future Promise."

The three-day gala will open on Friday night at Hidden Valley with a centennial ball featuring the crowning of a Valley Centennial Queen chosen through a valley-wide contest (entry blank information contained in separate story).

The affair is planned as a glittering valley social event with dinner, music, dancing, a full bar and entertainment.

Saturday morning, Aug. 5, will kick off two days of celebration with an 11 a.m. parade beginning at the airport and wending its way through the village to a termination at the Village Community Center. Big plans are afoot for the parade, according to organizers. Units will include a queen's float, a marching band or bands, a sheriff's mounted posse, a color guard from the Naval Postgraduate School, antique cars, a hay wagon, a stage coach containing the parade's grand marshal and other dignitaries, pony carts, the Cachagua pack train team, decorated bicycles, and, of course, horses.

At the Community Center, the adjoining land owned by Landing at Lahaina, and Tularcitos School, there will be other centennial attractions including more than 40 booths offering refreshments, games of chance and skill, arts and crafts exhibits and sales, and other festive features.

Valley residents 100 years hence will be able to read about this centennial observance as well as about other events and happenings of 1989 through the contents of a time capsule which is being prepared and will be buried with appropriate ceremony as one of the many highlights of the celebration. Contents for the capsule and its preparation are in the hands of Web Buckham and persons wishing to include items in the capsule should telephone him at 624-1639.

A primary display expected to attract major interest is the re-creation of an Esselen Indian village of the 1889 period complete with hogans, working fire pits, reconstructed canoes made of reeds, bakery ovens and a granary storage. Indian women in native dress will be making acorn patties and descendants of the early Indians who will be manning the exhibits will carry on a dialogue with visitors. Construction of the village is under the direction of Tom Nason, upper valley rancher and a descendant of the early Esselen tribe. To build the village he is enlisting a group of some 75 Indians from the valley and neighboring areas.

Randazzo said Delfino Place will be the site for a Saturday night street dance, and that a 10-kilometer race on Saturday will terminate at Delfino Place.

Artisans of the valley will have their turn in the sun through a planned arts and crafts exhibit including displays, and sales, of the work of valley artists, sculptors, metal workers, photographers and the other arts.

A special feature of the three-day program will be a reenactment of an early day stagecoach run and mail delivery at the site of the original post office in the White Oaks area. Post office officials from Washington are being invited to take part in the creating and offering of special commemorative envelopes and a commemorative stamp will hopefully be available. Postmaster Terry Williams of Carmel Valley is arranging details.

New committees are being created every week as planning progresses, Randazzo said. Committee chairmen named to date are Gene Erner, music; Orville Rogers, Queen's Coronation Ball; Alan Cosseboom, 10-K race; Jim Chinn, treasurer; Stew Clough, history; Bud McDonald, booths and security; John Hannon, legal; Web Buckham, time capsule; Bob Heald and Gary Carmichael, street dance and parade security; Roger Williams, secretary; Larry McCann and A.J. Stotler, communications; Rod Mills and Roger Weeks, arts and crafts; and Dick Heuer and Dick Nimmons, publicity.

Carmel Valley Kiwanis Club is the coordinating organization and is furnishing much of the manpower. Carmel Valley History Society is supplying much of the background information going back to early days of the valley. The Carmel Valley Women's Club is taking responsibility for several projects.

The facts are these: The 3 or 4,000 acre feet, variously cited by different sources, as the additional normal year water need for development in present master plans is the smallest portion of the water which will be made available for municipal water users. The drought reserve which could be provided, and is I believe the reason a solid majority of citizens support a dam, is far larger both in quantity and as a percentage.

At the San Clemente site nearly 70 percent of the time over 10,000 acre feet of water would still be in storage at the end of the water year. This stored surface water plus the reserves in full aquifers, 13 to 17,000 acre feet, will amount to an identifiable drought reserve of over 25,000 acre feet.

It should be noted that with present facilities there is little water left in the two relatively tiny dams even in wet years. The drought reserve in the aquifers is now annually depleted to provide water for normal use.

The anti-dam propagandists are confused by, or attempt to confuse by, the way substantial environmental benefits derive from facts that the aquifers will be kept full as a drought reserve and that the dam will control flows, both winter and summer, to provide releases that optimize benefits both to the municipal users and to steelhead and other natural wildlife and vegetation.

With the Carmel Valley aquifer full in most summers to provide a drought reserve it becomes a simple matter to also keep the fish alive. Enough water can be released from the reservoir to meet summer fishery needs since it will no longer disappear into the subsurface aquifer. The same water can be extracted by downstream wells for municipal use before it is wasted to the ocean.

During the winter storms water in excess of steelhead migration needs, now wasted, can be stored and later released on a schedule which benefits both people and fish and other wildlife as well.

Unwarranted intrusion

Dear Editor:

A renewed assault upon the rights of home owners was buried in the legal columns of last week's Pine Cone. It gave notice that next Tuesday the Carmel City Council will hold a hearing on a proposed ordinance to require city approval for removal of pine, redwood, oak and cypress trees of more than 6 inches diameter on private property.

You would have to apply for a permit to cut such a tree and presumably have it inspected by the Forest and Beach Commission which could grant or withhold approval. You could, of course, appeal an adverse decision to the council, for a fee, and would also run the risk that an approval would be appealed by a neighbor. This has happened under the present limited ordinance which applies only to new construction.

The alleged justification for this invasion of private property rights is to preserve upper canopy trees. Of course, their upper canopy tree may be your storm menace, sunlight barrier, plant killer, view blocker or whatever else might prompt you to want its removal. Still you may be forced to live with it or move.

Looking around Carmel, one sees upper canopy trees in abundance. It is the nature of the tree life-cycle that it ages and dies. That a few home owners for good reasons of their own choose to hasten the process is a poor reason for condemning them to keep trees they don't want. And what a disincentive ever to plant new specimens of these types if the minute they exceed six inches, you no longer have control over them!

A variation of this proposal was laid to rest by the last council. In case this one has any doubts about it, home owners should attend the public hearing on April 4 in Carpenter Hall at 4 p.m. or write or telephone council members to express opposition to this unwarranted intrusion on our rights.

Bring on trucks

Dear Editor:

Trucked water during droughts has an important role to play. As an alternative water source of non-potable water and distribution system it can save our gardens and vegetation from burnout.

During the last drought some entrepreneurs rigged up water trucks to those who owned 1 to 3,000 gallon tanks. There were many takers for this trucked, non-drinking water at even 10 cents per gallon. There are some 80-plus tanks in Pebble Beach alone. Most of these are near driveways, convenient for off loading from trucks.

This time there should be a more comprehensive, efficient delivery service and a better placement of tanks to dually achieve rainfall capturing from the roofs in winter and a closed water recycling system. A cistern system with multiple tanks or rain barrels, perhaps?

The city of Carmel is off and running with its own trucked water system for their own residents. But delivery of the water free in small amounts may overwhelm the single truck delivery system. If our water-starved communities got moving with their own trucked water system, with small fees, we could all weather the drought with less pain.

Sources of pockets of usable, non-drinking water must be identified and carefully monitored. But this "cistern system" of extra on-site storage has big potential. Let's get it into operation.

Seeking merchant seamen

Dear Editor:

Forty-four years after World War II, the merchant seamen who carried war supplies to the armed forces through hazardous submarine-infested waters, and also manned the ship's guns, were finally granted Veterans Status by the Department of Defense.

It is interesting to note that their death rate was similar to that of the United States Marine Corps.

The problem at this time is: there is no list of surviving seafarers anywhere.

May I ask for your help to find some of these men by running a small notice in your newspaper?

They may contact the foregoing organization at:

Birth mothers group meets every month

A BIRTH mothers support group meets once a month at the Childrens Services Center in Monterey.

Birth mothers are women who have given their children up for adoption; the group allows these women to share their feelings with others, according to Teri Livingston, who has been a member of the 2-year-old group.

"There are a lot of women out there...and there's a lot of pain involved," she said. "This gives them a chance to talk about it. We're not a search group, but we have information on it."

The support group meets at 7 p.m. on the last Wednesday of each month at the center at 648 Pine Ave. in Pacific Grove. More information can be obtained by calling either Carol Bishop or Gayle Ward at Childrens Services Center of Monterey County, 649-3033.

HELL WEEK

We've all heard the noise, fought the crowds and put up with the bad manners that some of the youngsters brought with them when they came here for their spring vacation.

Carmelites are aware of what "Hell Week" used to be here. They are also aware of the job that Police Chief Clyde Klaumann and his officers have done to make it more bearable for Carmel.

A reporter from this newspaper spent two nights this week sharing the experience with Carmel police. It was interesting, and certainly gratifying, to this reporter to learn that a group of particularly offensive young hoodlums will spend the next few days as guests of the public. This reporter also commends the officers for their constraint in the face of unbelievable abuse by these same hoodlums.

This week is not yet over, not by a jugful, but you may be sure that our police department is doing its utmost to assure that law and order are preserved.

ED LEE SAYS CAL-AM CAN'T PUMP FAST ENOUGH

Water rationing might be necessary here within two years, according to one estimate presented to the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District at a March 13 public hearing.

And despite several challenges to a district report which estimates potential water demand and supply for the peninsula, no one denied that the projected growth will outstrip present supplies by the turn of the century at the latest.

The comments and criticism came as the district board of directors reviewed its draft report on water to be sent to the Central Regional Coastal Commission.

The report estimated that water for future growth in the California-American Water Co. service area will run out by 1993 if the present growth rate continues.

Ed Lee of Carmel Valley believes there will be water supply problems for the peninsula much earlier.

He told the board that even with four new wells in the Carmel Valley and a total capacity of 22,000-acre-feet of water per year, Cal-Am could have supply problems during the summer months of dry years as early as 1981.

MOTEL ORDINANCE TO BE REVIVED, OFFICIALS SAY

City officials expect to revive a moribund plan to prohibit new motels, but still plan to exercise some stringent controls on the proliferation of inns in Carmel.

The city council March 20 remanded the proposed new motel ban to the board of adjustments on the advice of City Atty. Don Freeman, who said the draft ordinance is illegal and conflicts with existing zoning codes.

A resolution to ban new motels and restrict inn remodeling was adopted Feb. 22 by the board of adjustments, which also sits as the planning commission.

The council action to delay adoption of the proposal does not mean the city intends to drop its plans to control motels, said city officials contacted last week by the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook.

A new proposal to control motels is expected to be prepared as part of a series of draft ordinances now being developed by assistant planning director Diane White and graduate planning intern Brian Roseth.

Bring own water to Molera Park

Drinking or potable water is no longer available in the Andrew Molera State Park, located on the Big Sur Coast.

In the past, potable water was provided by "water buffalos." The old military metal water tanks on wheels no longer meet state health standards for drinking water and have been removed from the park.

Campers and day users should plan on bringing their own drinking water. Drinking water is available at Pfeiffer Big Sur State Park and Julia Pfeiffer Burns State Park.

For further information, contact the Big Sur District Office at 667-2315.

The Home Stay Program contributes $250 per student toward expenses incurred by the host families. For complete information, call 624-5068. April 1 is the deadline.

'Intuitive Paintings' exhibited

A reception will celebrate a collection of works by students of Elizabeth Palmer's class, "Intuitive Painting." The class is for older adults and is offered through the Monterey Peninsula College "Learning is Living" program.

The reception will take place 5 to 7 p.m. Thursday, April 6 at the Marjorie Evans Gallery in Sunset Center, Carmel.

CUSD sponsoring drug awareness program for parents

CARMEL UNIFIED School District is sponsoring a five-week course called "Preparing for the Drug-Free Years: What You as a Parent Can Do."

The program is designed for parents of children in grades four to eight. Parents who want their children to avoid drug problems can learn about risk factors for teenage drug abuse and how to avoid them. The series is based on research from the University of Washington.

Parents can learn skills to:

Take a family position on drugs; teach their children how to stay out of trouble, while keeping their friends, and having fun; keep family conflict from getting out of control; create new opportunities for children to grow through active involvement in the family.

The course will be held from 7-9 p.m. on five consecutive Tuesday evenings in the library of Carmel Middle School beginning April 4. It will be taught by Carol Collins, counselor at Carmel High School and Stuart McDowell, school psychologist for Carmel Unified School District.

The cost is $10 per family and will cover 10 hours of instruction and a copy of the course's 142-page family activity book.

For more information, call Carol Collins at 624-1821.

Hospice coverage under Medicaid part of new law

REP. LEON E. Panetta introduced legislation March 2 which would provide mandatory hospice coverage for terminally ill patients under the Medicaid program, the nation's primary health care program for the needy.

Under legislation authored by Panetta and enacted in 1986, states are permitted, but not required, to reimburse the cost of hospice care for terminally ill patients covered by the Medicaid program. Currently 13 states provide a Medicaid hospice benefit.

Like other Medicaid services, the federal government reimburses the states for a portion of the hospice costs.

Under the new proposal, states would be required to reimburse hospice costs for Medicaid beneficiaries, with the federal government providing its normal share of the cost.

The bill was also sponsored by 15 other House members, including Rep. Henry A. Waxman (D-Cal.), chairman of the House Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, Edward R. Madigan (R-Ill.), that panel's ranking Republican, and Willis D. Gradison, Jr. (R-Ohio).

Panetta and Gradison also co-authored legislation enacted in 1986 which provides reimbursement of hospice costs under Medicare.

"Hospice is a compassionate, cost-effective system of caring for terminally ill patients that helps them remain in their homes and communities among family and friends," Panetta said. "It helps to relieve the physical, emotional, spiritual, and economic demands that terminal illness places on an individual and his or her family."

"At a time when health costs are rising rapidly for patients, their families, and government alike, we need to seek alternative forms of care that provide compassionate, effective treatment at a lower cost than traditional forms of care. Hospice meets these tests. It should be an integral part of Medicaid, just as it already is a part of the Medicare program."

Panetta noted that there are more than 1,700 hospice programs in operation throughout the country. Of the 1,450 which are full-service programs, half are already certified by Medicare, and 200 more are in the process of becoming certified.

Supervisor seeks applications to alcohol board

FIFTH DISTRICT Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman is inviting applicants to serve on Monterey County's Advisory Board on Alcohol-Related Problems.

This board reviews and evaluates alcoholism program needs, services, and facilities; they review the alcohol program plans and make recommendations to the Alcohol Program Administrator and the board of supervisors.

The board meets on the fourth Tuesday at 3:30 p.m. of each month, varying their meeting places between Monterey and Salinas.

Interested applicants residing in the 5th District are asked to contact Strasser Kauffman's office at 1200 Aguajito Road, Monterey or call 647-7755. The 5th Supervisorial District includes the Aguajito, Skyline Forest, parts of Monterey and Pebble Beach, Carmel, Carmel Valley, Big Sur and the Toro areas of the County.

Panetta accepting intern applications

REP. LEON E. Panetta announced that he is accepting applications for the annual Congressional Senior Intern Program in Washington, D.C.

The internship is open to citizens aged 60 and above who are involved in providing services and activities for the elderly. Two applicants from the 16th Congressional District will be chosen for the program, which lasts from May 21 to May 27.

Round-trip travel costs must be met by the program participant, but a stipend will be offered to cover the intern's lodging and other expenses while in Washington.

"Participants in the Senior Intern Program will be able to study the legislative and administrative process up close," he said. "Through seminars and speakers representing Congressional committees, federal agencies, and private organizations, the interns will learn about a wide array of programs related to aging and the elderly."

Those who wish to apply for the internship should write to Panetta, including in their letter a description of their involvement in providing services to senior citizens, a brief summary of their reasons for wanting to participate in the senior intern program, and how they would use the program to benefit their community after returning to Washington.

The application deadline is March 31st.

CVPOA protests water agreement

The real purpose for the objections to the agreement was not water rights, Lombardo said.

"What we have here tonight is really a plea to stop growth in Carmel Valley," he said.

Williams gave a passionate plea for Leonard and Emily Williams rights, both in their 80s, saying that because they have not developed their property before they might not be able to, something that will render it worthless.

The sale of the water might give them enough to hang on to their land.

The Williams would be willing to waive the right to sell their water if the district would waive the connection fee of $12,000 per acre foot.

Etienne gave a final offer to drop the water rights sale from the agreement and would announce that at the water district's April 10 meeting.

FIRST PERSON

Lovin' from the oven

By LAURA BAYLESS

WHEN I was a child, school, elementary public school, did not function without the support and superhuman effort of mothers.

Joining the PTA was de rigueur. All the good mothers joined the PTA. Only a few maverick mothers, ones who possibly drank, were invariably late, or those who never ironed, had the nerve or the apathy to stay away from PTA. Refreshments were always served at the monthly meetings, which meant there had to be a refreshment committee, dutifully nominated and elected. Someone from the committee would get on the phone and call until she had persuaded a volunteer to bring brownies, cookies, or some other high-calorie, homemade tidbit to the meeting. Mother hated clubs and committees worse than baking so she usually ended up spending the afternoon of the monthly meeting at her stove.

The mothers and an occasional father would sit through the interminable reading of the minutes of the last meeting, discussions of stimulating new business, which could be anything from the purchase of three new library books to what kind of punch should be served at the teacher's reception, and then perhaps a guest speaker would discourse on child behavior. Mother eventually dragged each one of us with her to these meetings at one time or another so we could witness her genuine love for us, which was exhibited by sitting on hard, metal chairs for three hours listening to the tedious business of the PTA.

Besides PTA, there were class parties, scheduled throughout the year near holidays, designed to make school seem like fun for a change. Each class had a room mother, never a room father then. That poor soul had the unenviable task of creating these theme parties and coercing other mothers into donating time, decorations, paper plates, etc., or into baking refreshments. Our mother, having three daughters within six years, was constantly asked to bake cookies during our grade school years.

She made dozens and dozens of heart-shaped, cut-out cookies, frosted pink and decorated with Red-Hot candies, pans and pans of chocolate cupcakes iced with appropriate Christmas, Easter, or Halloween colors. She bought us packages of assorted Valentines and supervised while we addressed one to every class member, donated crepe paper and colored paper for decorations, and baked, baked, baked.

Our schools in Pacific Grove also had one more form of mother-torture, known as The Butterfly Parade. Every child in every class was expected to be costumed and chaperoned for the annual parade in October welcoming the Monarch butterflies back to Pacific Grove. The delightful custom has survived to this day.

Mother attended the planning sessions for these yearly costume parties, knowing full well if she didn't put in her two cents worth, some other mother would suggest making elaborate costumes requiring hours of sewing or costly materials. Keep it simple, mother would interject regularly from her station near the back of the room.

"Let's make them Indians, gunny sacks and face paint are all we'll need."

As kindergartners, we were required to come as the cocoon stage and first-graders had to be butterflies. Wings were used from year to year, stored in the school cloak rooms. After that it was every class for themselves. Once I was a Spanish lady created from our "dress-up" box in the garage, with satin dress, lace shawl, and brown oxford shoes. Mother's particular nemesis was the fuschia costume fashioned out of crepe paper, wire, and wax, a nightmare of cutting, pasting, and delicate petals easily torn or misshapen. Who's idea was that she would always try to recall. Don't invite her to next year's planning session.

A bazaar was also held after the parade was over, with a bake sale of course.

She baked when she was tired of baking, she sewed when she would rather shop, and she went to meetings she loathed. She supported Girl Scouts, helped us earn badges, chaperoned us on school outings, let us have friends overnight, planned birthday parties we knew she didn't care to give, ironed costumes for never-ending plays, pageants, parades, and sat through eighth-grade speech contests, Christmas programs, and chorus recitals.

In short, she did what mothers did in those days—what mothers still do—give of themselves generously, lovingly, and unselfishly.

Unfolding magic

By HELEN HARRINGTON

ILLIA THOMPSON, teacher remarkable, could not assemble an ordinary run-of-the-mill writing class. Her class is always a place where magic unfolds, where long submerged thoughts bubble to the surface, becoming paragraphs to touch, moments to live again.

Illia's students notebooks are scribbled on, sighed over, talked to, sometimes tear-stained. Flat sheets of paper absorb imprints of personalities, receiving memories—keeping some, discarding others. Phrases that do not have a solid ring in the mind acquire extraordinary resonance when written by one's hand. As pens or pencils touch down, each of us steps off the world to whirl dreamily in a personal space for a little while, creating strings of words with which to lace our thoughts together.

However, upon signal, we return to reality. When asked by Illia to read aloud what we have found in our stratosphere we willingly give our reveries away. For we have learned to keep nothing for ourselves, that to pour out our essence is to have it preserved. During this illuminating sharing we know the privilege of stepping into other minds. Our hearing sharpens. Listening carefully, we can perceive that each author has a distinctive style, a unique way of exploring the universe. Every composition is intriguing.

We marvel at the height to which some imaginations soar, then back to earth, create spell-binding stories, or describe a happening so vividly we live within it, too. Other writers, wistfully recalling childhood, discover and develop a nostalgic pattern that seems to fit us all. For a few bright talents, tiny poems crystallize in the depths of their hearts, which they turn and polish and place like jewels before us. Now and then, the description of a heartbreak lets us gaze on awesome chasms of a soul. We hear shimmering, shattering, thoughtful, delicate, dynamic segments of life.

During this exceptional hour each of us grows. There is the unspoken awareness of an increase in loving understanding. We become radiant in the aura of creativity that envelops us.

No, ours is not the usual gathering, merely a craft honing exercise. It is an exhilaration that stimulates our senses and pushes incessantly against our good intentions. It is a fine teacher who retains a feeling of wonder, a soft voice, a keen intellect, but above all an unyielding conviction that the star of success shines for anyone who cares to look up. She also believes her students can dance on the head of a pin, or crawl through the eye of a needle.

Obviously, we are not ordinary, run-of-the-mill human beings in an ordinary run-of-the-mill creative writing class. Because Illia thinks so, we are literary miracle-workers! If she is persuaded the world must take note of our talents, shouldn't we strive to accept her challenge?

Publishers, are you ready?

(Editor's Note: The above writers are all from Illia Thompson's creative writing class at Del Mesa Carmel. Classes are also held at Carmel Foundation.)

From the couch to the table

IF YOU followed the suggestions in my last column and have engaged in a little more physical activity than you're used to, you are probably in the market for a well-deserved massage right about now. I know I am, and sometimes when I'm working out, looking forward to that massage is all that keeps me going. So in my search for the Oh Great Massage, here's a sampling of what I discovered:

Paul D. Tuff of Therapeutic and Sports Massage (659-3188), says that although sports massage therapists have specific training designed for sports-related problems, and the techniques are somewhat different from therapeutic massage, you don't have to be an aching athlete to benefit from a sports massage. It's great for reducing stress, it enhances fitness and performance, and is one of the best preventive maintenance procedures available.

Once during a training class, they ran out of athletes, so a 55-year-old housewife "donated" her body to the cause. When Paul was done with her an hour later, she said she felt 10 years younger, "let's do it again and go for 20!" Paul has worked with chiropractors, physical therapists, and is currently working at John Gardner's Tennis Ranch, as well as seeing clients at their homes or his office.

Sarah Lincoln of The Midas Touch (649-8635), offers a "million dollar combo treatment," no, not because of the cost, but because clients have said they feel like a million after manipulation by Sarah's magical "Midas touch" fingers. The combo treatment consists of a whole-body salt rub, a full massage and an accupressure "face lift." The salt rub combines sea salt and a special oil worked into the skin, removing dead skin and toxins and leaving you velvet soft and smooth. The accupressure face lift treatment rejuvenates blood flow and gives your face a healthy glow, and of course, a full therapeutic massage speaks for itself. Of course, you may select just one treatment, you don't have to order the combo (but you'll be glad you did).

Sarah also offers a 15-minute on-site massage using a portable specially designed chair, perfect for busy executives in their own office (I thoroughly enjoyed one at my own office), at your home, or on the golf course — you name it! Sarah, along with an associate, Barbara Kathka, also a certified massage therapist, will be demonstrating the on-site massage, the salt rub concept, and explaining the health benefits of massage (some medical insurance policies may cover massage therapy), at therapeutic massage parties to be held in private homes. The hostess will receive a complimentary gift certificate to use or give away for a salt-rub, full body massage, or whatever they choose. Call Sarah for further information.

Aaron Maschmayer, CMT (479-3297), says "Nothing kinky. I just get out the kinks." He provides a sturdy massage table, the appropriate linen for warmth and modesty, and soothing music for comfort and relaxation, at your home or in his Pacific Grove office. His commitment is to service four persons per day and to treat them like royalty. His massage work is tailored to the needs of the individual, ranging from soft, gentle energy work to deep tissue work and sports massage. He helps people get in touch with their own mind/body relationship by integrating several styles of massage. He works with Chiropractors, acupuncturists and marriage and family counselors.

Norma M. Ross (625-5114), practices Norma-lizing: she has had training and holds certificates in Touch for Health (muscle testing and energy balancing), the Trager Method (non-invasive rhythmic massage), shiatsu (pressure points), reflexology, lymphology, accupressure, polarity and Swedish massage. Suffice it to say, she is a "whole body-care" specialist!

Touch for Health is particularly good for athletes, because it helps in coordination; there is a harmonious flow of energy throughout the entire body. Norma-lizing truly does normalize body functions, and Norma calls her sessions a "luxurious necessity" for maintaining vitality. As if that isn't enough, Norma also holds a California license and was European trained as an aesthetician (skin care). She has done years of research to find pure skin care products and does complete skin care counseling and treatment.

Steve Harmer and Segrid Daffner (624-9499), are a husband-and-wife team who not only practice private massage therapy, work for a chiropractor, teach at the Monterey Institute of Touch, but they also offer private tutoring in a variety of massage styles such as beginners massage, shiatsu, deep tissue and body posturing. They must know their stuff, because once a client became so relaxed that the client remained some 2 1/2 hours after the treatment, and ended up closing and locking up the office! Although Steve and Segrid each have masters degrees in other fields, they chose careers in massage therapy because they find it personally rewarding to deal with and help people.

Jacqueline Oelheim (373-8699), includes yoga stretches with massage techniques. She prides herself that even the tiniest muscle does not escape her attention. Jackie points out that people take better care of their cars than they do of themselves, and she believes that massage is part of a whole health package. Even the Pentagon has massage therapists on duty, as a result of evidence that health care expenses can decrease, and worker productivity can increase, with regular massage therapy. Could this be Japan's secret to success, where their businessmen indulge in a minimum of three massages per week, increasing their endurance and stamina? Or, as Jackie puts it, "for clarity and prosperity."

Massage is an ancient healing art, applicable to the fast pace of life in this age. Massage can serve as a powerful contribution to your health care system. It reduces pain and promotes relaxation, creating a positive effect, both mentally and physically. Historically, massage was used before and after athletic events, as well as during training. Maybe we should take a page from history — go ahead! You deserve it! Indulge yourself; you'll be glad you did.

TAKE MY WORD FOR IT

By D. Patrick Gallagher

The right to know

THE PUBLIC'S right to know is a phrase much bandied about by the press and news media. Jurists dispute the existence of any such constitutional right. The Judiciary, in fact, defends the regulatory right of the government to keep from the people certain classified activities, so labeled. Since the Constitution grants no specific right to know about all government activities, from where do we derive this idea that we have a right to know what the government is doing?

The First Amendment to the Constitution gives the press license to print whatever news it might be able to discover. The business of printing news is a competitive one, and many reporters, editors and publishers do not always see news as a crusade to inform the public. Many see it, purely and simply, as a commercial enterprise for profit. It is however, from this mixed bag of responsibilities, moral obligation and profit motive, the concept of the public's right to know has sprung.

The news media operate with almost no restraint because of the First Amendment. If they believe a story to be true, and absent malice, print it, there virtually is no recourse against them. It is the price we pay to ensure against censorship, which however well intended, would intimidate a free press and, in so doing, deny to all of us its benefits.

The news business incurs certain responsibilities inherent in these protections, but not universally respected by all its members. One such responsibility is to ascertain, within reason, the veracity of the story to be printed or broadcast. The second is to decide, unilaterally, the propriety of printing or broadcasting the story. There are no other relevant guidelines.

Of no consequence are how the press obtained the story, the classification of the information, the motivation of the source, nor the method by which the information was obtained by the source, legally or illegally. Once the information is in the hands of a news organization, only the questions of reasonably assumed veracity and propriety require resolution before it is released.

In some cases, the Pentagon Papers for example, a third consideration may enter the equation. Legal advice may be sought, prior to publication, by publishers faced with the possibility of court action as a result of printing some story.

In the event of legal action against the publisher, how material is obtained and under what circumstances it is printed, are different issues. Classified government information, for example, raises a complex question of property rights, for do not papers belonging to the government, by definition belong to the people, and are not news organizations conduits for placing them in the hands of their rightful owners?

The fact that the news media may have a story does not prohibit the courts from restraining its printing (provided the news organization is foolish enough to alert authorities in time to do so). Jurists, however, generally have shown a reluctance to impose injunctions on the press because of constitutional protections against prior restraint, which indeed are covered by the First Amendment.

So specific is the language of the First Amendment in its protection of free speech, that the Judiciary is loathe to interfere except in the most exceptional cases, most often dealing with national security issues. The courts would prefer that specific circumstances resulting from the story's publication be tried, if necessary, after the fact of publication. Self-restraint by the media is preferred to prior restraint by the courts.

Above all, newspapers and broadcasters must not become entrapped deciding, based upon their political preference or a misguided sense of national interest, which uncovered covert operation bears publication, and which ought not be published. Once again, only two criteria, veracity and propriety, are applicable.

So the public's right to know is a moral right, a sub-right, if you will, of the First Amendment's protection of a free press. To know what our government is doing, and to publicly and privately voice our opinion of its activities, is a responsibility we bear as citizens of a democracy.

This is particularly true in the case of "the president's" foreign policy. No one man, according to our Constitution, embodies the foreign policy of our nation. That function is granted not only to the president, but also to the Congress, without whose consent to foreign policy can truly be representative of the national interest. Further, without the approval of an informed public, no foreign policy is likely to be successful. This was the fallacy in Iran-Contra.

While the government is legitimately empowered to keep secret certain of its activities, the press is equally protected in its search for, and publication of, any and all government activities. The press is the surrogate of the people, who are the true beneficiaries of the protections of the First Amendment.

(Editor's Note: Mr. Gallagher of Carmel regularly provides us with explanations of etymology, the history of constitutional terms, and errors in everyday English. For questions or comments, drop him a line at PO Box G-1, Carmel 93921.)

Happy trails

LONGTIME CARMEL resident Howard Sehlin has announced his retirement from the banking game, and will leave Monterey County Bank this Friday, March 31.

Sehlin has served as senior vice president at the bank's Carmel Rancho branch since June of 1984.

Last year Sehlin was awarded the American Bankers Association Presidential Citation for outstanding service, given to the banker who best exemplifies the banking profession.

Many of Sehlin's friends, customers and fellow staff members gathered at his retirement party given by the bank last week.

"Howard will be greatly missed by the officers, directors, and staff of Monterey County Bank, as well as the many customers and friends whose lives have been enriched by knowing him," said Charles Chritzberg, chairman and CEO of Monterey County Bank.

Sehlin and his wife, Ruth, plan to move to the Fresno area in order to be close to family and friends.

Chritzberg terms Sehlin as "the epitome of the gentleman banker."

Fill in the blanks...Mum's the word down at Chaos, Rita Shugart's women's clothing store that is slated to go out of business on April 30.

Business manager Jim Webb said he wasn't going to comment on circumstances that have led to the closing of the oft-occupied storefront on Lincoln between Fifth and Sixth.

Speculation is that the building has been sold and Chaos' lease has not been renewed, or maybe it's just the lack of traffic flowing in that direction of town. Who knows?

A word to the wise dept...Bruce Dini, assistant VP down at Kidder, Peabody & Co., offers some sage advice to small business owners who are looking for tax advantages as April 15 nears.

"Each year, especially during tax season, people are deluged with a myriad of new investment opportunities extolling the virtues of everything from airplane leasing to historic housing restoration," he says. "The common thread among these programs is their tax-advantaged structure."

Dini says that the principal drawback in the majority of those offers is that they lack personal flexibility.

Instead, he suggests the Simplified Employee Pension (SEP), which is an easy and inexpensive plan for any business.

Under the SEP plan a business owner is allowed to contribute up to 15 percent of compensation, not to exceed $30,000, per participant each year into a special trust account designed for retirement.

Contributions may be varied or even skipped for a year, as long as you do not discriminate between employees.

"Basically, the eligibility requirements you set must apply to all participants, including yourself, and any part-time employees," explains Dini.

Benefits provided by federal law allow your money to build up faster than it might in a taxable account because all earnings on your contributions, including dividends, interest, and capital gains, will compound tax-deferred.

Don't forget you are able to reduce your taxable income by each amount contributed to the pension plan.

A lifetime Carmel area resident, Hermanson is a recent graduate of the Cabrillo College Dental Hygiene Program and, along with Carl, is offering a soft tissue management program to help those with ailing gums.

"If you don't take good care of your gums, no other dental work matters," offers Hermanson, who before becoming a hygienist worked as a blackjack dealer at Harrah's Club in Tahoe while working her way through U.C. Davis. Hermanson owns a bachelor of science degree in community nutrition from Davis.

Some residents may remember Hermanson from her days as a student at Carmel High School, where she competed in both speed and synchronized swimming.

Hermanson is a member of the American Dental Hygienists' Association.

PARENTING HAS A "GOAL"

Becoming adult emotionally is defined simply as having the ability to see oneself as a whole and separate person.
Sounds so easy, but "growing-up" is tough!

Infants, rightly, see themselves as an extension of their parents. Toddlers, though totally dependent, begin to explore their independence by wanting to do things "all by themselves." Adolescence is a chaotic, emotional time alternating between an independent and dependent need for parental influence and support.

Parents who are able to see this separation as the ultimate goal of parenting survive and enjoy this task of raising children. In truth, parenting is life's most difficult job, but it can also be life's most rewarding.

If you have any questions regarding this week's subject, please feel free to call MARCIA RENNEY, Licensed Marriage, Family & Child Counselor. 142 Carmelito, Monterey, 372-6599.

ORGANIZATIONS OFFER LIFE-SAVING COURSES

People who want to be prepared to save a life in an emergency situation can learn the skills in upcoming American Heart Association approved cardiopulmonary resuscitation courses.

In the Monterey Peninsula area, Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula has courses scheduled for April 1 from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. or a two-session course on May 18 and May 25 from 6:30 until 9:30 p.m. Call 625-4730 for information. The Mid-Valley Fire Department gives courses for groups on request.

"I encourage people to take basic life support training because it gives them the opportunity to save family members, friends or even a stranger if they choke on food or have a heart attack," said Kathy Patton, who chairs the heart association's basic life support committee. "They will know what to do rather than sit around and be totally helpless."

The courses focus on techniques specially adapted for saving adults, babies and children. Those learning the skills can choose a course which covers all ages or focuses on a specific group. "For instance, if a new mother comes home from the hospital with a premature, high risk infant, she could take the babies and children course," Ms. Patton said.

CALIFORNIA EARTHQUAKE PREPAREDNESS MONTH APRIL 1989

If a major earthquake struck your area today, you might be without assistance for up to 72 hours. Are you prepared to be self-sufficient? Is your family? Your neighborhood?

To enhance public awareness about earthquake preparedness and to encourage citizens to "get prepared," the governor has proclaimed April 1989 as "California Earthquake Preparedness Month."

Since earthquakes strike without warning, it is important to act now. The longer you wait, the greater the risk. The experts know that damaging earthquakes are coming but they don't know when, so it's smart to assume that it's sooner than later. At least then, you'll be prepared. You can rest a little easier knowing that you know what to do before, during, and after the quake.

The "Beat the Quake" brochure gives detailed information on what to do before, during, and after the quake. To receive a free copy of the "Beat the Quake" brochure, call Emergency Medical Services at 1-425-2149.

KAZU 90.3 FM REACHED GOAL OF $40,000 FOR SPRING SUBSCRIPTION DRIVE

KAZU 90.3 FM reached its goal of $40,000 for the spring 1989 Subscription Drive which concluded on March 22 with a tribute to Bob Dylan followed by a Modern Rock special. Hundreds of listeners began or renewed their subscriptions.

KAZU broadcasts to communities all over the Monterey Bay area from studios in Pacific Grove.

The money earned during the drive will help cover operating expenses during the next six months. Contributions from listeners supplement the many hours of volunteer time given by programmers, office staff, the board of directors, and others who keep the station on the air with a variety of high quality music and talk shows. The station depends on its listeners for support to maintain this programming without commercial interruption or influence.

According to Development Director Paulette Lynch, the success of the drive will also help the station in its effort to secure a grant from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

KEEPING ITS business longevity record intact, Carmel Hardware has relocated from its Dolores Street location, where it had been in operation for more than 63 years, to the west side of Junipero Avenue at Sixth Avenue. SENIOR LINE

By Bill Schneider

Skunk tax

Q. AS a method for financing the Medicare Catastrophic Expansion Act, the surtax stinks. Why not levy a surtax on every school age child to improve our schools? Why not a tax on every motor vehicle owner to finance highway construction and repairs? Why not just a Value Added Tax (VAT) on everything manufactured to finance the whole kit and caboodle?

BR. Carmel

A. I agree with your sentiment but not necessarily the solution, even though some aspects are intriguing. Let me offer a few points of concern I have with the act.

Estimates are that fewer than 4 percent of the elderly will benefit from the expanded hospitalization and elimination of multiple deductible provisions annually.

More than 70 percent of seniors have either Medigap policies, receive employer sponsored health insurance coverage, are members of Health Maintenance Organizations, or are otherwise insured against catastrophic/acute illnesses.

No one can predict how high the surtax may go. Scheduled increases raise the $800 per individual ($1,600 per couple) maximum liability in 1989 to $1,050 ($2,100 per couple) by 1993. The costs are open-ended and the coverage is not as complete as the bill's name implies.

Although the law provides a cap of $1,370 on out-of-pocket covered physician expenses in 1990, it will realistically require approximately $6,500 in total physician charges to reach $1,370 in eligible out-of-pocket costs since 20 percent of all costs and the doctor's charges over Medicare allowable limits will continue to be the patient's responsibility. The $1,370 cap is already estimated to grow to $1,900 by 1993 according to the Congressional Budget Office.

At this time I won't go into the change in principle involved in this type of financing or possible solutions to the mess created since I fear I'm beginning to sound like a broken record.

An article in the March 1989 issue of Retirement Life explains in more detail the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) pilot program to insure home equity conversion mortgages. A total of 2,500 mortgages may be insured in the program which will run through Sept. 30, 1991 and is open to people 62 years old or more with little or no mortgage debt remaining on their property.

Tenure, Term and Line of Credit mortgages will all provide a source of income for the homeowner by converting the amount of equity in the home into a mortgage issued by a lender and insured by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA).

Tenure mortgages provide for monthly payments from lenders to homeowners for as long as they occupy the home as principal residence. Term mortgages provide for monthly payments for a fixed period agreed upon between the lender and the borrower. Line of Credit mortgages permit homeowners to draw money at times and in amounts of their own choosing. Each of these mortgages may bear interest at a fixed or adjustable rate.

In addition, if the principal balance of the mortgages grows to exceed the value of the property, a homeowner cannot be displaced and forced to sell the home. Homeowners can sell their property at any time, and proceeds in excess of the amount needed to pay off the mortgage will revert to the homeowner.

The program is expected to begin in late spring, following publication of final rules. Application may then be made at the Department of Housing & Urban Development, 450 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco, Ca. 94102-3448 (Tel: 415-556-5900).

(Need information on senior affairs? Write Senior Line, Area Agency on Aging, 1184 Monroe Street, Suite 10, Salinas, Ca. 93906 or call 372-7662. Senior Line needs your name, address and phone number but these will be withheld on request. Printed letters may be edited to meet space requirements.)

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

The welcome mat is out at the Peace Corps for older Americans, men and women who want to use their skills to help people in developing countries. There is no upper age limit for senior volunteers because, the Peace Corps says, "No other single age group has more to offer in terms of experience, maturity, and demonstrated ability." About one in 10 volunteers sent abroad is over 60; some are in their 60s and 70s. Volunteers are selected for their experience in agriculture, education, business management, skilled trades such as carpentry and mechanics, and other fields. But acceptance isn't automatic — applications exceed openings by more than five to one.

Now common is arthritis among people 65 or over? It affects about 680 women out of 1,000, according to the National Center for Health Statistics. For men, it's about 300 per 1,000.

Remember when? 1929 — A new era for the movies began with the release of "Don Juan," the first full-length feature film with a synchronized sound track.

Gold star marriages

Ladies' Day, March 1981

Recently, a Rotarian told me his wife was the light of his life. I told him that these words had a nice poetic ring like a St. Valentine's Day card. Seriously, he said that before his marriage he lived in a kind of physical and mental darkness. "My wife not only brought me out of darkness, she forced me to be a light."

There are various types of light; the artificial light that gives us a headache. There is the blinding light that frightens robbers. There is the limelight that some men demand and some wives give them. My Rotarian friend said that his ideal wife was none of these. Rather, she was a good and godly woman, a giving person and that she had taught him to share.

Oh Lord, help us to bring that kind of light and love to each other; husband to wife, wife to husband, friend to friend and even to our enemies.

In last Sunday's paper there was a quote from the Argentinian Nobel Peace Prize-winner Adolfo Perez Esquivel: "No one can sow seeds with fists. To sow seeds one must open one's hands."

In my long life as a priest I have met many arguments for celibacy, but once in a while I encounter a marriage made in heaven. I pray to God it is yours. If anyone feels he qualifies, come up and see me and I'll put a gold star on your marriage license, presuming, that is, that you have one.

GARDEN CLUB ESTABLISHES ENVIRONMENTAL HOTLINE

The Carmel-by-the-Sea Garden Club, member of The Garden Club of America, was represented in Washington, D.C. at the March Legislation Meeting by the National Affairs and Legislation Committee and the Conservation Committee to discuss key issues of concern which the Garden Club supports.

Members met with their senators and representatives to discuss the following bills: The Arctic National Wildlife Refuge Wilderness Bill; Clean Air Act and Global Warming; American Heritage Trust Act; Groundwater Protection; and the Scenic Byways Study Act. The GCA also supports strong pesticide control legislation. The Garden Club Hotline—(202)-293-1351—which is updated every Monday, highlights priority bills as they move through the legislative process.

The Garden Club of America strongly supports the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge Bill which designates the coastal plain of the refuge as wilderness and opposes any bills or amendment that would open the refuge to oil and gas leasing. A revised version of the Global Warming bill would establish national energy policy to slow down the emission air of pollutants contributing to global warming. The American Heritage Trust Act bill would provide more stable funding for parks, recreation and historic preservation programs.

PANETTA RECEIVES PRESTIGIOUS AWARD FOR WORK AGAINST HUNGER

Rep. Leon E. Panetta was honored March 14 by the Food Research and Action Center (FRAC) as the first recipient of the Raymond M. Wheeler Award for Distinguished Service in Fighting Hunger in America.

Panetta received the award for his legislative efforts to protect and strengthen federal food and nutrition programs.

In announcing the award, FRAC called Panetta "one of the most compassionate and effective leaders in the fight against hunger in America."

Panetta, who became Chairman of the House Budget Committee in January, served as Chairman of the House Agriculture Committee's Subcommittee on Nutrition from 1983 to 1988. He also chaired the House Select Committee on Hunger's Task Force on Domestic Hunger from 1985 to 1988.

He is the author of the following anti-hunger measures:

- The 1983 Resolution on Preventing Hunger at Home;
- 1983 legislation to authorize the Temporary Emergency Food Assistance Program, under which millions of tons of surplus food commodities have been distributed to the needy;
- the Hunger Relief Act of 1984, which restored federal nutrition benefits which had been cut in 1981;
- key nutrition benefits in the 1985 farm bill;
- nutrition provisions for the homeless that were enacted as part of the McKinney Homeless Assistance Act of 1987; and
- the Hunger Prevention Act of 1988, the most significant anti-hunger legislation passed by Congress in over a decade.

Panetta has also been selected to chair the 14th anniversary gala dinner of the National Italian American Foundation to be held Oct. 14, in Washington, D.C.

The NIAF Gala Dinners have become one of the premier annual events in Washington—attracting nearly 3,000 people including every president of the United States since NIAF was founded. For further information, contact the National Italian American Foundation (202) 638-0220.

The students are being sponsored by individual clubs throughout the state. Forty-nine students from Monterey Peninsula high schools will attend the workshop courtesy of the local CFRW club.

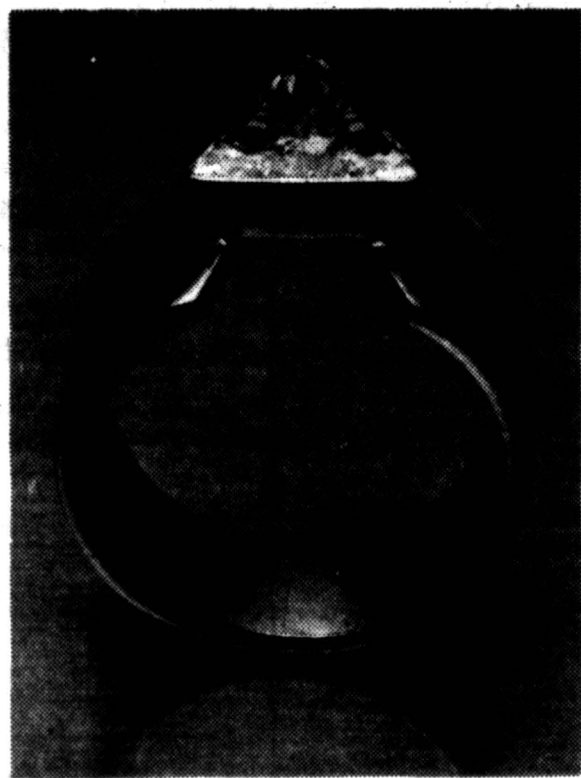

Key Republican legislators will discuss a projected 1989 legislative agenda at both the morning and afternoon sessions on April 4. Gov. Deukmejian will be the luncheon speaker at the Convention Center, also on April 4.

The stuff of dreams becomes inspiration for gathering of art

DREAMING ART. Visions from the Unconscious," a comprehensive survey of dream-inspired and surreal art, opens for a month-long exhibition on Saturday, April 1 with a reception for the artists at the Cherry Foundation.

ARTS & LEISURE

Enigmatic animal-like forms, explosive patterns, ghostly shapes and vibrant colors create an expressionistic circus of the imagination in the all-media show representing the works of 60 peninsula artists.

The 60-piece show is the centerpiece in a month-long series of programs focusing on art from the unconscious organized by the Cherry Foundation in collaboration with the friends of C.G. Jung.

Participants in the exhibit were encouraged to appropriate images from their dreams, visions, intuition and body feelings and adapt them to a medium of their choice. The result is a mixture of disparate primal images, colors, shapes and forms—all unified by what Jung called "the archetypal depths."

Included in the show, which runs through April 30, will be the work of Cherry Foundation mentor, Jeanne D'Orge, whose paintings, one critic wrote, "seem to act as a trigger to the unconscious, to feelings long dormant."

A striking feature of the exhibition is the unusually wide range of concepts, from Jim Casteel's Rorschach-like face floating in a sea of purple in "I Dreamed of Death in a Red Sombrero" to Ann Rizzo's haunting monotype, " Sylvia Plath and her Horse" to the rarefied, magical photographs of William Giles.

A reception for the artists will be held from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. on Saturday, April 1 in the foundation's gallery located at Fourth and Guadalupe, Carmel.

The exhibition is made possible in part through a grant from the Monterey County Cultural Council.

The Cherry Foundation's gallery is open from 11 to 4 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

For more information, call 624-7491.

BIRTH, a photograph by Carmel Valley lensman William Giles, is featured in the "Dreaming Art" show in Carmel. A reception for the artists is set 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. Saturday, April 1 at the Cherry Foundation Gallery, located at Guadalupe and Fourth.

MARLIE AVANT'S Oja Caliente Vision, a 30-by-40-inch acrylic, is one of 70 paintings in the all-media exhibition, "Dreaming Art."

It opens Saturday, April 1 at the Cherry Foundation Gallery in Carmel.

Bike Trek for benefit of Lung Association

THE CHALLENGES and rewards of cross-country bicycle riding will be discussed at a Bike Trek information meeting, set 7 to 9 p.m. Wednesday, April 5, in the conference room of the Monterey Youth Center, 777 Pearl St. in Monterey.

The informational meeting is free and open to all interested individuals. For further information call the Lung Association at 373-7306.

All photographers invited to help document 48 hours on the peninsula

ALL PHOTOGRAPHERS are invited to record "48 Hours on the Monterey Peninsula." The effort will take place Friday and Saturday, April 14-15, and has been organized by The Photographic Center of the Monterey Peninsula.

This event has been designed as a celebration of the 150th year of photography. Instead of exhibiting an historical collection of photographs, The Photographic Center of the Monterey Peninsula has chosen to celebrate the anniversary by documenting 48 hours of activities and views on the peninsula.

The prints will be used as the beginning of an archival collection of photographs to be maintained at the center, as well as exhibited in The Photographic Center Gallery during the months of August and September, coinciding with the date of the introduction of the photographic process on Aug. 19, 1839 by Louis Daguerre in Paris.

Based on the "Day in the Life" series of photographic books, all photographs submitted must be taken during the 48-hour period from 12:01 a.m. April 14 to midnight on April 15. The prints must depict life on the peninsula within the boundaries of Marina on the north to Garrapata Beach on the south to Los Laureles Grade on the east. Entries may be in black and white or color. The competition is open to everyone — it is not necessary to be a resident of the Monterey Peninsula.

A screening committee comprised of photographers on The Photographic Center's board of advisors will set the rules and choose which photographs will be exhibited in the Photographic Center Gallery from Aug. 19 to Sept. 24. All accepted prints, including those that space prohibits showing the gallery, will then become part of the archival collection of prints at the center.

Josephus Daniels Gallery in Carmel is donating 500 souvenir buttons, which will be passed out to entrants at a pre-shoot party and bean feed at The Photographic Center on the evening of April 13. The badges will identify participants on the two days of the shoot.

All participants must register with the Photographic Center before April 10. There is a $5 registration fee, $2 for students. Upon payment of the fee, entrants will be given a registration packet outlining all rules of the shot.

The center is open 1 to 5 p.m. weekdays for registration. The office and gallery are located in Sunst Center, on San Carlos Street at Ninth Avenue in Carmel.

All photographs submitted will become the property of the Photographic Center and may be used as part of a traveling exhibit in the future, as well as part of the archival collection at the center.

JAZZ TIDES

By John Detro

Straight, no chaser

CLINT EASTWOOD'S love of jazz continues its translation onto the silver screen. He lobbied for the financial structure underneath Round Midnight and then directed Bird. Now a new documentary on an American maestro has Clint's name attached—as executive producer.

Title: Thelonius Monk—Straight, No Chaser. Director-producer Charlotte Zwerin and producer Bruce Ricker use some stills with narration and much Monk footage that was shot in Europe by Christian Blackwood more than two decades back. Pianists Dick Hyman, Barry Harris and Tommy Flanagan contribute interpretations of Monk compositions. The 90-minute item was shown at San Francisco Film Festival, drawing excellent reviews.

Clint was out of town at this writing. Festival sources said his investment allowed the production team to complete their project. Warner Brothers has the distribution rights. The film's movement into general circulation was anticipated "in the fairly near future."

PIANIST GEORGE SHEARING will appear with Monterey County Symphony on April 15 at Sherwood Hall in Salinas. More immediately, KRML Jazz Radio celebrates that fact with a series of three specials revealed by station honcho Gil Wisdom.

On Thursday (3/30) broadcaster Johnny Adams will present an hour-long program on Shearing starting at 5 p.m. "This will include biographical material," Johnny says, "along with jazz tracks that range from 1939 to 1989."

Between 4:30-5:00 the afternoon of April 6, Johnny will play more Shearing cuts and have a telephone interview with George. In the same time slot a week later (4/13) Adams will interview Symphony conductor Clark Suttle.

Center Stage Ticketing will take reservations for the Sherwood Hall date. Additional details shortly.

Meanwhile, jazz pianist and RLS student Eddie Mendenhall offers a Sunday morning jazz show over KSPB (91.9 FM)—the radio station of Robert Louis Stevenson School. Eddie's three-hour weekly stint begins at six. This Sunday (4/2) he plans a tribute to the late Bill Evans.

CLOSING OUT March at the Sheraton's Monterey Bay Club: guitarist Larry Scala fronts a group on Thursday (3/30). Then Mark Hummel and those Blues Survivors work there the next night. April looks like a strong month for the local venue.

Joining the Bay Club regulars will be singers Ronnie Barnes (4/1) and Scotty Wright (4/5). Scotty's first album got rave reviews from eastern jazz critics.

Kenny Stahl brings in his jazz flutes (4/12). Pianist Bob Phillips, drummer Andy Weis and Terry Miller on electric bass round out this bright unit.

San Francisco vocalist Kitty Margolis returns (4/19). She'll have fine pianist Dick Hindman, Vince Lateano (this planet's most dapper drummer), bassist Scott Steed. Scott was on Mark Murphy's Grammy-nominated September Ballads package.

Reedman John Cortes of Pacific Grove has been playing a good many San Francisco gigs—Kimball's, private things that call up Cole Porter tunes and then decorate the society pages. He comes home (4/20) with pianist John Donaldson, bassist Seward McCain, Dan Sabanovich on drums. Dan teaches at San Jose State University; Seward's a study in refined craft.

Excellent vocalist Madeline Eastman (4/27) knocks out San Francisco Bay Area audiences regularly. She's a vocal judge for the 1989 student competition of Monterey Jazz Festival.

Another homecoming. On Tuesday night (4/5) Kuumbwa Jazz Center in Santa Cruz will have the Gary Burton Quintet with reedman Donny McCaslin, who studied with now-retired Don Keller at Aptos High before attending Boston's Berklee School of Music.

The Burton group also includes brilliant pianist Makoto Ozone. Sets at 7:30 and 9:30; $12.50 per. Center Stage Ticketing.

EVEN FOR a pickup band, it was at certain moments a pretty strange gig. I mean several nights ago at the Monterey Bay Club. Leader: Loren Pickford on alto sax.

Behind him were guitarist George Roessler, Dasher (David Kempton) at the electronic keyboard, bassist Terry Miller, out-of-town drummer Jeff McCutchen.

George's solos enwrapped the sound of searching—an honest investigation that brought to mind those edgy gaps so vital to Bud Powell and then Hampton Hawes. Dasher and Terry stand among this area's very best jazz musicians—and they performed bravely.

Loren and Jeff would leave a tune's established groove and build another rhythmic pocket while apparently believing they were right on the money with everyone else. This happened twice while I was there, and I heard only the last hour or so. The leader and his drummer chuckled together; Loren made smiling and inaudible comments in Jeff's direction. The rest of the band might as well have been in another country, timewise. This's not an unkind observation; with jazz the slimmest temporal fractions can change everything.

We're all in this process together. My style does not include huge and final pronouncements. It simply seems that what actually happened needs serious examination by the players themselves—especially if this same configuration plans on seeking other jobs.

IT'S CALLED Vintage Sounds. And the 1989 Paul Masson Summer Series features many jazz heavyweights within an eclectic roster. Concerts run from June through September at that beautiful winery (Saratoga hills).

Just some of the jazz headliners: Ray Charles and Betty Carter (6/1-4), Ella Fitzgerald (6/9-11), Miles Davis (6/17-18), John McLaughlin and Al Dimeola (6/24-25), Roberta Flack (7/13-16), Pat Metheny (8/1-3), B.B. King fronting a full blues show (8/17-20), Mel Torme and George Shearing (8/31-9/4), George Benson (9/14-17), Dave Brubeck (9/16-17), Stephane Grappelli and Turtle Island String Quartet (9/23-24).

Tickets go on sale for the general public April 23. Join the Summer Series mailing list—by writing to the winery—and you'll have first choice when you get the brochure being mailed out April 7.

ART NOTES

By Sam Colburn

Schlock on the decline

IT APPEARS to me that over the past 10 years that there is a decline in schlock on the peninsula. My definition of schlock is that it is a certain remorseless repetition of hackneyed images.

The Carmel Art Association has offered a number of varied shows, particularly one-man exhibits, that have a great range of imagery. Rosamond, down in the Crossroads, has also encouraged a range of "seeing." There are others also, like the First Impressions gallery in Carmel. Dorothy Bowman at the Fireside Gallery has a good eye.

The Pacific Grove Art Center has been particularly effective in offering unusual insights. The current exhibits are quite exciting. Ken Fadern is showing in the David Gill Gallery. He is a man of many images. His oils are quiet, and well-modulated. He obviously likes to push the paint around. He is a juicy painter. These works are all abstract.

For color I like "Sugar-Coated, Ice Cream & Lollypop Art, 1987." Although no figure is to be seen in his "Moses," there is a sense of spiritual arrival. His sculpture does not seem related to his painting. He uses draped cloth to create flowing forms.

"The Artist as Natural Mystic" is puzzling and different from anything else in the show. This piece is ripe with symbolism. With a whopper of an anchor, the artist does not seem capable of drifting. One piece bothers me, "The Fix" is graphic and gory.

LIGHTHOUSE AVE.

By Gary Shallcross

Iris learned early in married life that the key to successful slow poisoning is careful time management.

The center of the Gill Gallery displays the innovative sculpture of Terry Dean Adkison. He has made a number of "White Ladies" out of muslin and gypsum. They are at leisure on chairs or benches. None of them has any fingers or toes, perhaps as the result of evolution. Perhaps they are from some other planet as suggested by figures "White Bushie, 1989" and "Grey Bushie, 1989."

Out in the hallways of the center are the black and white drawings and prints of Judith M. Benson. She has entitled this exhibit, "Ties That Bind." She uses mixed media to develop strong forms that seem to flow as in "Seascape, 1984." There are many female figures in these pieces. I think that she has a lust for life. "Seeing These Babies" is very robust.

The Elmarie Dyke Gallery is vibrant with color. Joan Towers has a lush palette. There is no holding back. I would say that she is an Expressionist. The way she uses oil in some of these paintings makes me think of stained glass. "Her Ladies Who Lunch" is satirical which I feel is characteristic of her approach. She is very conscious of the use of space.

THE CARMEL ART Association was and is the center for the showing of art in the professional village of Carmel. Their galleries are set back in a garden. It is charming in a town where each square foot of land in the business district is worth more than a mouthful of gold teeth.

The exhibits are varied as there is a large membership and a new hanging every month.

At present there is a joint showing of the work of Miguel Dominguez, a painter, and that of Wah Chang, sculptor — in the Beardsley Gallery. Miguel is exhibiting drawings, watercolors and paintings in which he uses both watercolor and acrylic. He combines the last two very effectively. This is not easy as the result can be quite phony.

I like his development of dark and light areas in which he achieves a mysterious glowing. This is especially evident in "Blossom Silhouette" and "Point Lobos Mist." He is showing an oil entitled "Buttercups" which has a strange, old fashioned quality. The studies of barns show a fine use of space. He has a feeling for these structures which are, unhappily, fast disappearing from the landscape.

Forty years ago I went forth several days each week to paint groups of farm buildings. They are all gone now including, of course, the magnificent Hatton Ranch which was my motif number one. It was quite a complex, the only farm around with a two story house. The other structures I painted seemed part of the agricultural terrain around them. They are all gone now. There were several around Castroville, and some over Highway 101 between Salinas and Gilroy.

Wah Chang shows a number of bronzes. The lost wax technique of casting is explained very well through photographs. His new work shows an increasing simplification of natural form. This is evident in "Embrace II," "Spring Crocus," and in "The Guardian" and "The Eagle" as well. I was charmed however by the more realistic "Running Polar Bears."

THE HIGHLANDS GALLERY is on Dolores Street in Carmel between Fifth and Sixth avenues. It is devoted entirely to sculpture. This art has come a long way in recent years. I can remember the portrait heads that were done years ago. If you put them in a corner it was fine, because the sculptures of those days did a dull job with the back of the heads — then along came Epstein and changed all that.

There is great variety in this gallery. The abstract sculptor has three dimensions to consider, and in which to work.

Ken Young creates forms of welded wire. "Kinetic Sculpture No. 47" is an example of his thought and feeling. Chimes are spare and elegant. They combine sound and shape.

An artist by the name of Winni Brueggeman displays several of these delights to the eye and ear. Shapes that are intertwined are very involved in intimate space as in Tony Cetone's "Les Amants," done in Norwegian maple. His "Manzanita Burl" is interesting to me, perhaps because of the material. Norman Lewis has made a very felicitous shape called "The Pod," cast in bronze.

"Untitled" by Marcene Lornier is a wall sculpture out of fiber/metal. Bronze does not always appear as such. A patina can be applied as in Norma Lewis's "Volare."

My friend, Gordon Newall, is very well-represented by a number of bronzes: "Vallejo Bird," "Duo," "Organic Wholeness," and "Eyeless in Gaza." The last is in reference to a novel by Aldous Huxley.

Of all the sculptors in the area, I would say that Gordon Newall has completed more commissions than any other. I was very surprised by the extent of his work throughout the state. This is shown in a book of photographs in the gallery.

In connection with sculpture I should like to mention the statue of Abraham Lincoln which, I suppose, remains in place in Washington, D.C. This stone came from Marble, Colorado. I believe that the Washington Monument was erected with the same material.

When I first visited Marble there were tremendous blocks of this stone just sitting there. The demand for this beautiful work of nature had simply declined. People stopped using it for sinks, floors, etc. I understand that those massive chunks were ground up into roofing granules.

The last time I was in Marble there were a few hunks lying around. My son, Bolton Colburn, took a piece and put it in the car. Not far out of there we ran into snow and also another car. This occurred on the pass going south out of Ouray. When we got to the Grand Canyon, Bolton threw the marble down that massive canyon, thus creating a puzzle for geologists.

THEATER REVIEW

By Anne Papineau

'Come Back, Little Sheba' opens at Cherry Hall

THE SPARE dimensions of Cherry Hall make an especially apt frame for William Inge's circa-1950 drama, Come Back, Little Sheba. Last Thursday's opening night audience packed the Carmel theater. And when the house lights dimmed the confines of the stage seemed to dissolve and afford an up-close look at a family in a state of unbecoming.

Doc and Lola are the quintessential dysfunctional couple. They've been together some 20 years, when a teenaged Lola became pregnant and they married out of necessity. Their baby died, and with it whatever resolve the couple had to pursue dreams.

Doc dropped his pre-med studies and became a chiropractor. Alcoholism consumed him, but at the start of Come Back, Little Sheba, he has been dry for some time. Doc recites the Serenity Prayer and attends AA meetings with grim determination. As for Lola, her days are punctuated by little more than radio dramas and tiny talks with the neighbors and delivery men who happen by.

The monotony of their lives is relieved some by a young boarder, Marie. She's studying the art of drawing and college romance concurrently, and Doc and Lola seem to relish her cheerful presence.

Conrad Selvig directs this play for Monterey Peninsula College. The production maximizes the impact of Inge's taut script and Cherry Hall's economical stage.

A gem-like set has been designed by Selvig. It is vintage cluttered, down to the green enameled kitchen with its white Mixmaster poised for whipping up the chocolate cake Lola speaks of. The place is reminiscent of Archie Bunker's house — with a slipcovered couch substituting for his fabled armchair.

This cast of Come Back, Little Sheba is as devoted to detail and realism as the set builders. Some actors appear but briefly, yet their performances linger in the memory. For example, the milkman is a diversionary character, a light-hearted walk-on. Jerry Gill imbues this small part with a blend of strength and humor that is ideal.

Exhibiting skill in the show-off role of Turk, young Marie's boyfriend, is Brian T. Mahoney. With a more than passing resemblance to James Dean, Mahoney is well cast physically as a jock and model for the college life drawing classes. No opening night jitters surfaced to mar Mahoney's smooth, casual performance.

The object of Turk's attentions, Marie, was brought to carefree life by Julie Ann Hughett. Hughett took command of her engaging character, a girlish, giddy vision, who proves a painful counterpoint to Lola. Hughett and Mahoney possess a potent chemistry in their love scenes, moments which incidentally herald the downfall of Doc.

Despite the relief offered by neighbors, the responsibility for bringing Come Back, Little Sheba to life chiefly rests on the shoulders of Doc and Lola.

For the majority of Come Back, Little Sheba, Len Parry turns in a constricted performance as Doc. And for much of the show, his interpretation is effective. Parry's Doc speaks in measured phrases, as if he has pre-calculated the energy required to speak a paragraph or cross a room. Keeping a handle on sobriety seems to be all the task Doc can handle. His anguish is palpable.

Trouble is, when Parry's Doc slips off the wagon, he lets go with his voice and not his movements. In his drunkenness, the once timid, self-conscious Doc lets fly the epithets and crockery. But Parry retains many of the sharp, rigid gestures he introduced earlier, as if the alcohol worked on Doc's tongue but not his other muscles.

Juggling the mayhem is Lola, played by Ann Mattingly, who crafts a multi-dimensional performance as the housewife who still calls for her lost dog, Sheba. Wistfully she beckons her pet, searching with frightened, unseeing eyes in the darkness that shelters the audience. Those are Lola's private moments. When Doc and Marie are home, Mattingly brings a "life of the party" exuberance to the room, nosing into everybody's business and volunteering tidbits about her brief spell of belle-hood.

A FLIRTATION between the art student Maria (Julie Hughett), and her model Turk (Brian T. Mahoney), has serious consequences in Come Back, Little Sheba. The MPC Players stage William Inge's drama at Cherry Hall in Carmel.

Mattingly hits no off-notes. Despite the disparity of her character's actions — languorously listening to "Taboo" on the radio, pleading with Doc's friends to wrest him from an alcoholic stupor, Mattingly makes it work.

Although the subject matter of Come Back, Little Sheba might be dismissed as depressing, Monterey Peninsula College has realized a compelling evening of theater. Care has been injected into the setting and the characters. The small theater brings the drama into sharp focus. It makes for an evening well spent.

Singkreis Laudate is an ensemble of choir-singers, brass-players and instrumental players of different instruments. They intend to give some impression of musical life in German churches, especially the United Methodist Church and Baptist congregations.

The participants of this trip are members of various parish choirs, which are mostly formed of 15 up to 25 singers, or eight up to 15 brass players. They all are members of the Christlicher Sangerbund (Christian Singers' Association of Germany) and the Bund Christlicher Posaunenchor Deuschlands (Christian Brass Players' Guild of Germany). These two organizations, being founded about 100 years ago, provide special training, retreats, and workshops for choirs, ensembles and choir directors.

The concert program will consist mainly of German church music of old and today.

The choir was founded in the early '70s by Max Kohler of Friedrichsdorf (near Frankfurt). Max Kohler in his main occupation is a safety engineer. He also serves as the director of several choirs, mainly in the United Methodist Church. He is an instructor of brass ensembles of the Bund Christl.

The instrumental players will include organist Harald Opitz, a professional church-musician of Essen, Matthias Muller, who is also in charge for the brass ensemble, and Arnd Schuler, also responsible for the recorder ensemble.

The Community Church of the Monterey Peninsula is located on Carmel Valley Road one mile east of Highway 1. For details, call 624-8595.

The 32nd choral tour of Loyola Marymount University arrives Friday in the Carmel Mission Basilica. Admission is free; however, donations are much needed.

This group of 70 singers consists of a male chorus, a women's chorus plus a virtuoso mixed chorus along with a combined repertoire, presenting secular and sacred music under the direction of Paul Salamunovich.

Highlights presented by the Women's Chorus include Gustav Holst's Ave Maria for double treble chorus, Three Madrigals of Ernst Krenek, Four Russian Peasant Songs of Stravinsky, and works of Mendelssohn, Thomas Tallis, Robert Bell and J. Randall Stroope.

The men's program will feature a Laudate Dominum by Jan Nieland, the Gloria from Schubert's German Mass, the Alma Redemptoris Mater Chant and a setting by the Italian Renaissance composer Francesco Soriano, the Halleluja from the Mount of Olives by Beethoven, the Russian folksong Stenka Razin, a Welsh song, Sospan Fach.

'Feminine Side of God' discussed by Jungians

"THE FEMININE Side of God: A Psychological Interpretation of How She Lives in Us All" is the title of the lecture/discussion to be presented at 7 p.m. Friday, March 31 at All Saints' Church, Ninth and Dolores, Carmel.

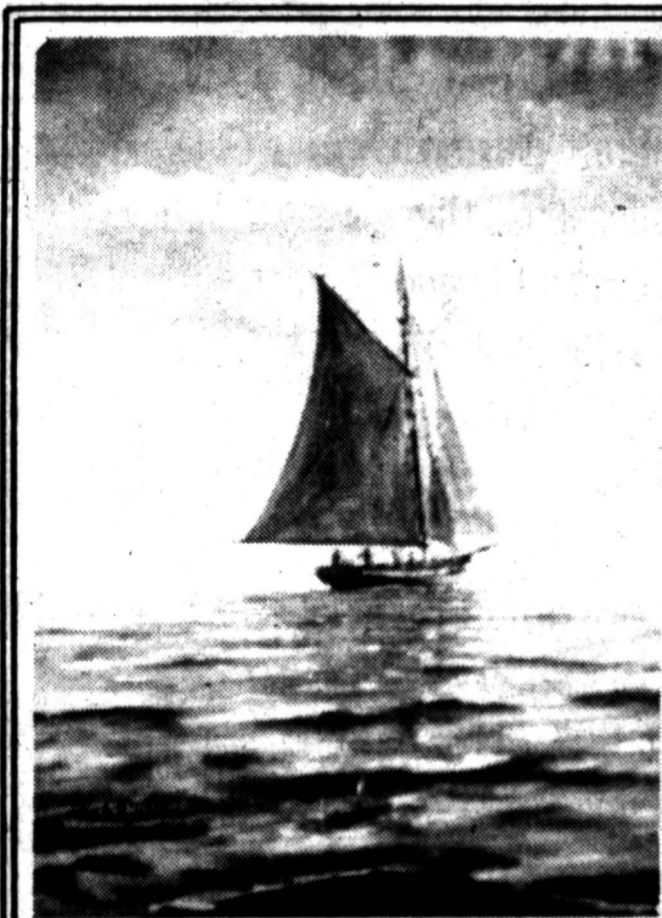

Sponsored by the Monterey Peninsula Friends of C.G. Jung, the presentation will be made by Susan E. Schwartz, a Jungian analyst who comes from Paradise Valley, Ariz. in order to address the group.

She will trace the concept of the feminine in the forms of Shekhina (the Divine Manifestation) and Lilith (Eve's predecessor) from the Jewish Kabbalistic writings. How these qualities have affected our own psychic feminine nature will be demonstrated in this talk, and participants may experience how an interweaving of psychological and spiritual elements is rooted in our common heritage—both masculine and feminine.

The public is invited to this and all other events organized by the Friends of C.G. Jung. This is an informal collection of people who are sharing an enthusiasm for the seminal ideas of the Swiss psychologist. Events like the one described help them make practical applications of his insights to their everyday lives.

Prior registration is not required. A modest donation is suggested to help defray expenses. For further information, call or write, 649-8809; 853 Pacific St., Monterey.

A Cry of Players

Step back in time to an autumn in the 1580s, to an obscure town in England, sprinkled with the raucous, unkempt and, at times, brutish characters so prevalent during the Elizabethan era. This period, a time when the fork had not yet found its way to table, is the setting for a tale about William Shakespeare's early life.

William Gibson wrote A Cry of Players, which focuses on Shakespeare's days before he went off to London with a travelling group of thespians. He calls it "a bawdy play, in the grand style — not for the timid."

A Cry of Players will be presented by The Western Stage. Performances are set at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday, March 30-31 and April 1.

Admission is $10 to Friday and Saturday shows. Season subscribers pay half-price.

The Western Stage is housed in Hartnell College, 156 Homestead Ave. (off West Alisal Street), Salinas. For further information or reservations, call 375-2111 or 758-1221.

Right You Are (If You Think You Are)

Luigi Pirandello's sly look at gossip in a small Italian town, Right You Are (If You Think You Are) explores what a rising tide of inquisitiveness does to the objects of the town's nosiness. The play is brought to life by The Staff Players Repertory Company at the Indoor Forest Theater in Carmel.

Pirandello was years ahead of his contemporaries in his understanding of the observer's point of view. The notion of Total Objectivity seemed a myth to him. Right You Are... carries the audience with the actors into a close look at how much we really know about one another.

Curtain is at 8 p.m. Thursdays through Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays until April 8.

Tickets are $9 general and $7 for students, senior citizens and the military. The Indoor Forest Theater is on Mountain View at Santa Rita in Carmel-by-the-Sea. For information or reservations, call 624-1531.

Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All for You

Christopher Durang's satire of organized religion, Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All for You, makes its Central Coast debut at the GroveMont Theater.

Mindy Stock portrays Sister Mary, a slightly "round-the-bend" nun who delivers charmingly ghoulish lectures on Catholicism to her parochial school students. Devised as no mere diatribe against the church, Sister Mary is instead a character who conveys the insidious ways any large organization spreads its dogmatic views. Durang has produced a play which some view as hilarious, multi-layered and disturbing.

The production is directed by Stephen Moorer and also features Dorian Ellis, Mickie Mosley Braun, Kevin Hanstick, Jim Sully and Luke Stock.

Curtain is at 8 p.m. Thursdays through Saturdays and 2 p.m. Sundays until April 2.

Ticket prices are Thursdays and Sundays are $8.50 general and $7 for students, senior citizens and the military. Tickets on

The theater is at 320 Hoffman, between Lighthouse and Hawthorne, in New Monterey. For advance tickets, call 649-5561. For reservations, call 649-6852.

Only an Orphan Girl

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors, and persons who may be otherwise interested in the will or estate, or both, LESSI ELLEN CULMER.

A petition has been filed by ELEANOR REGINA HICKS, in the Superior Court of Monterey County requesting that ELEANOR REGINA HICKS be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

IF YOU OBJECT to granting of the petition, you should either appear at the hearing and state your objection or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the deceased, you must file your claim with the court or present it to the personal representative appointed by the court within four months from the date of first issuance of letters as provided in section 900 of the California Probate Code. The time for filing claims will not expire prior to four months from the date of the hearing noticed above.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a formal Request for Special Notice of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in section 1250 of the California Probate Code.
